2. In navigation; a certain contribution, that merchants proportionably make towards the losses of such, as have their goods cast overboard for the safety of the ship in a tempest; and this contribution seems so called, because it is so proportioned, after the rate of every man's average of goods carried. Cowell.
3. A small duty, which merchants, who send goods in another man's ship, pay to the master thereof for his care of them, over and above the freight. Chambers.
4. A medium; a mean proportion.

AVE'RMENT, å-vêr'mênt. n. s. [from aver.]

1. Establishment of any thing by evidence.

To avoid the oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate, which is eigne, the party will sue a pardon. Bacon.

2. An offer of the defendant to justify an exception, and the act as well as the offer. Blount.

AVE'RNAT, å-vêr'nât. n. s. A sort of grape. See VINE.

AVERRUNCA'TION, åv-êr-rûn-kå'shûn. n. s. [from averruncate.] The act of rooting up any thing.

To AVERRU'NCATE,[51] åv-êr-rûn'kåte. v. a. [averrunco, Lat.] To root up; to tear up by the roots.

Sure some mischief will come of it;
Unless, by providential wit
Or force, we averruncate it. Hudibras.

AVERSA'TION, åv-êr-sâ'shûn. n. s. [from aversor, Lat.]

1. Hatred; abhorrence; turning away with detestation.

Hatred is the passion of defiance; and there is a kind of aversation and hostility, included in its essence. South.

2. It is most properly used with from, before the object of hate.

There was a stiff aversation in my lord of Essex, from applying himself to the earl of Leicester. Wotton.

3. Sometimes with to: less properly.

There is such a general aversation (in human nature) to contempt, that there is scarce any thing more exasperating: I will not deny, but the excess of the aversation may be levelled against pride. Government of the Tongue.

4. Sometimes, very improperly, with towards.

A natural and secret hatred and aversation towards society, in any man, hath somewhat of the savage beast. Bacon.

AVE'RSE, å-vêrse'. adj. [aversus, Lat.]

1. Malign; not favourable; having such a hatred, as to turn away.

Their courage languish'd, as their hopes decay'd;
And Pallas, now averse, refus'd her aid. Dryden.

2. Not pleased with; unwilling to.

Has thy uncertain bosom ever strove,
With the first tumults of a real love?
Hast thou now dreaded, and now bless'd his sway,
By turns averse and joyful to obey? Prior.

Averse alike, to flatter or offend;
Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend. Pope.

3 It has most properly from, before the object of aversion.

Laws politick are never framed, as they should be; unless presuming the will of man to be inwardly obstinate, rebellious, and averse from all obedience unto the sacred laws of his nature. Hooker.

They believed all, who objected against their undertaking, to be averse from peace. Clarendon.

These cares alone her virgin breast employ;
Averse from Venus and the nuptial joy. Pope.

4. Very frequently, but improperly, to.

He had, from the beginning of the war, been very averse to any advice of the privy council. Clarendon.

Diodorus tells us of one Charondos, who was averse to all innovation; especially, when it was to proceed from particular persons. Swift.

AVE'RSELY, å-vêrse'lê. adv. [from averse.]

1. Unwillingly.
2. Backwardly.

Not only they want those parts of secretion; but it is emitted aversely, or backward, by both sexes. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

AVE'RSENESS, å-vêrse'nêss. n. s. [from averse.] Unwillingness; backwardness.

The corruption of man is in nothing more manifest, than in his averseness to entertain any friendship or familiarity with God. Atterbury.

AVE'RSION, å-vêr'shûn. n. s. [aversion, Fr. aversio, Lat.]

1. Hatred; dislike; detestation; such as turns away from the object.

What, if with like aversion I reject
Riches and realms? Milton.

2. It is used most properly, with from before the object of hate.

They had an inward aversion from it; and were resolved to prevent it, by all possible means. Clarendon.

With men, these considerations are usually causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others; but with God, so many reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Spratt.

The same adhesion to vice, and aversion from goodness, will be a reason for rejecting any proof whatsoever. Atterbury.

3. Sometimes, less properly, with to.

I might borrow illustrations of freedom, and aversion to receive new truths, from modern astronomy. Watts.

4. Sometimes with for.

The Lucquese would rather throw themselves under the government of the Genoese; than submit to a state, for which they have so great aversion. Addison.

This aversion of the people, for the late proceedings of the commons, might be improved to good uses. Swift.

5. Sometimes, very improperly, with towards.

His aversion towards the house of York was so predominant, as it found place, not only in his councils, but in his bed. Bacon.

6. The cause of aversion.

They took great pleasure, in compounding lawsuits among their neighbours; for which, they were the aversion of the gentlemen of the long robe. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

Self-love and reason to one end aspire;

To AVE'RT, å-vêrt'. v. a. [averto, Lat.]

1. To turn aside; to turn off.

I beseech you,
T' avert your liking a more worthy way,
Than on a wretch. Shakspeare's King Lear.

At this, for the last time, she lifts her hand;
Averts her eyes, and half unwilling drops the brand. Dryden.

2. To cause to dislike.

When people began to espy the falsehood of oracles, whereupon all gentility was built, their hearts were utterly averted from it. Hooker.

Even cut themselves off from the opportunities of proselyting others, by averting them from their company. Government of the Tongue.

3. To put by, as a calamity.

O Lord! avert whatsoever evil our swerving may threaten unto his church! Hooker.

Diversity of conjectures made many, whose conceits averted from themselves the fortune of that war, to become careless and secure. Knolles.

These affections earnestly fix our minds on God, and forcibly avert from us those things which are displeasing to him, and contrary to religion. Spratt.

Thro' threaten'd lands they wild destruction throw,
Till ardent prayer averts the public woe. Prior.

A'UGER, åw'gûr.[98] [166] n. s. [egger, Dutch.] A carpenter's tool to bore holes with.

The auger hath a handle and bit; its office is to make great round holes. When you use it, the stuff you work upon is commonly laid low under you, that you may the easier use your strength: for in twisting the bit about by the force of both your hands, on each end of the handle one, it cuts great chips out of the stuff. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

AUGHT, åwt.[393] pronoun. [auht, aht, Saxon. It is sometimes, improperly, written ought.] Any thing.

If I can do it,
By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him. Shaksp.

They may, for aught I know, obtain such substances as may induce the chymists to entertain other thoughts. Boyle.

But go, my son; and see if aught be wanting
Among thy father's friends. Addison's Cato.

To AUGME'NT, åwg-mênt'. v. a. [augmenter, Fr.] To increase; to make bigger, or more.

Some cursed weeds her cunning hand did know,
That could augment his harm, increase his pain. Fairfax.

Rivers have streams added to them in their passage, which enlarge and augment them. Hale.

To AUGME'NT, åwg-mênt'. v. n. To increase; to grow bigger.

But as his heat with running did augment,
Much more his sight encreas'd his hot desire. Sidney.

The winds redouble, and the rains augment,
The waves on heaps are dash'd. Dryden's Virgil.

A'UGMENT, åwg'mênt. n. s. [augmentum, Lat.]

1. Increase; quantity gained.

You shall find this augment of the tree to be without the diminution of one drachm of the earth. Walton's Angler.

2. State of increase.

Discutients are improper in the beginning of inflammations; but proper, when mixed with repellents, in the augment. Wiseman.

AUGMENTA'TION, åwg-mên-tå'shûn. n. s. [from augment.]

1. The act of increasing or making bigger.

Those who would be zealous against regular troops after a peace, will promote an augmentation of those on foot. Addison.

2. The state of being made bigger.

What modification of matter can make one embryo capable of so prodigiously vast augmentation, while another is confined to the minuteness of an insect? Bentley.

3. The thing added, by which another is made bigger.

By being glorified, it does not mean that he doth receive any augmentation of glory at our hands; but his name we glorify, when we testify our acknowledgment of his glory. Hooker.

AUGMENTA'TION Court, åwg-mên-tå'shûn-kôrte.[169] A court erected by king Henry

3. Favourable; kind; propitious: applied to persons or actions.

Fortune play upon thy prosp'rous helm,
As thy auspicious mistress! Shakspeare.

4. Lucky; happy: applied to things.

I'll deliver all,
And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,
And sails expeditious. Shaksp. Tempest.

A pure, an active, an auspicious flame,
And bright as heav'n, from whence the blessing came. Roscommon.

Two battles your auspicious cause has won;
Thy sword can perfect what it has begun. Dryd.

AUSPI'CIOUSLY, åw-spîsh'ûs-lè. adv. [from auspicious.] Happily; prosperously; with prosperous omens.

AUSPI'CIOUSNESS, åw-spîsh'ûs-nês. n. s. [from auspicious.] Prosperity; promise of happiness.

AUSTE'RE, åw-stère'. adj. [austerus, Lat.]

1. Severe; harsh; rigid.

When men represent the Divine nature as an austere and rigorous master, always lifting up his hand to take vengeance, such conceptions must unavoidably raise terror. Rogers.

Austere Saturnius, say,
From whence this wrath? or who controls thy sway? Pope.

2. Sour of taste; harsh.

Th' austere and pond'rous juices they sublime,
Make them ascend the porous soil, and climb
The orange tree, the citron, and the lime. Blackmore.

Austere wines, diluted with water, cool more than water alone, and at the same time do not relax. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

AUSTE'RELY, åw-stère'lè. adv. [from austere.] Severely; rigidly.

Ah! Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Might'st thou perceive, austerely in his eye,
That he did plead in earnest? Shaksp.

Hypocrites austerely talk
Of purity, and place, and innocence. Par. Lost.

AUSTE'RENESS, åw-stère'nês. n. s. [from austere.]

1. Severity; strictness; rigour.

My unsoil'd name, th' austereness of my life,
May vouch against you; and my place i' th' state
Will so your accusation overweigh. Shaksp.

If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this austereness into a smile, he hardly could resist the proper motives thereof. Brown's V. Err.

2. Roughness in taste.

AUSTE'RITY, åw-stêr'è-tè.[511] n. s. [from austere.]

1. Severity; mortified life; strictness.

Now, Marcus Cato, our new consul's spy,
What is your sour austerity sent t' explore? B. Jonson.

What was that snaky-headed Gorgon shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin,
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone,
But rigid looks of chaste austerity,
And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence
With sudden adoration and blank awe? Milton.

This prince kept the government, and yet lived in this convent with all the rigour and austerity of a Capuchin. Addison.

2. Cruelty; harsh discipline.

Let not austerity breed servile fear;
No wanton sound offend her virgin ear. Roscommon.

A'USTRAL, åws'trâl. adj. [australis, Lat.] Southern; as, the austral signs.

To A'USTRALIZE, åws'trâl-ize. v. n. [from auster, the south wind, Lat.] To tend towards the south.

Steel and good iron discover a verticity, or polar faculty; whereby they do septentriate at one extreme, and australize at another. Brown's V. Err.

A'USTRINE, åws'trîn.[140] adj. [from austrinus, Lat.] Southern; southernly.

AUTHE'NTICAL, åw-*th*ên'tè-kâl.[509] adj. [from authentick.] Not fictitious; being what it seems.

Of statutes made before time of memory, we have no authentical records, but only transcripts. Hale.

AUTHE'NTICALLY, åw-*th*ên'tè-kâl-lè. adv. [from authentical.] After an authentick manner; with all the circumstances requisite to procure authority.

This point is dubious, and not yet authentically decided. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Conscience never commands or forbids any thing authentically, but there is some law of God which commands or forbids it first. South.

AUTHE'NTICALNESS, åw-*th*ên'tè-kâl-nês. n. s. [from authentical.] The quality of being authentick; genuineness; authority.

Nothing can be more pleasant than to see virtuosos about a cabinet of medals, descanting upon the value, rarity, and authenticalness of the several pieces. Addison.

AUTHENTI'CITY, åw-*th*ên-tîs'sè-tè. n. s. [from authentick.] Authority; genuineness; the being authentick.

AUTHE'NTICK, åw-*th*ên'tîk. adj. [authenticus, Lat.] That which has every thing requisite to give it authority; as, an authentick register. It is used in opposition to any thing by which authority is destroyed, as authentick, not counterfeit. It is never used of persons. Genuine; not fictitious.

Thou art wont his great authentick will Interpreter through highest heav'n to bring. Milton.

She joy'd th' authentick news to hear,
Of what she guess'd before with jealous fear. Cowley.

But censure's to be understood
The authentick mark of the elect,
The publick stamp heav'n sets on all that's great and good. Swift.

AUTHE'NTICKLY, åw-*th*ên'tîk-lè. adv. [from authentick.] After an authentick manner.

A'UTHOR, åw'*th*ûr.[98 418] n. s. [auctor, Lat.]

1. The first beginner or mover of any thing; he to whom any thing owes its original.

That law, the author and observer whereof is one only God, to be blessed for ever. Hooker.

The author of that which causeth another thing to be, is author of that thing also which thereby is caused. Hooker.

I'll never
Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand
As if a man was author of himself,
And knew no other kin. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
My being gav'st me; whom should I obey
But thee? Milton's Par. Lost.

But Faunus came from Picus, Picus drew
His birth from Saturn, if records be true.
Thus king Latinus, in the third degree,
Had Saturn author of his family. Dryden.

If the worship of false gods had not blinded the heathen, instead of teaching to worship the sun and dead heroes, they would have taught us to worship our true Author and benefactor, as their ancestors did under the government of Noah and his sons, before they corrupted themselves. Newton.

2. The efficient; he that effects or produces any thing.

That which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Shaksp.

Now while the tortur'd savage turns around,
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound,
The wound's great author close at hand provokes
His rage. Dryden's Fables.

From his loins
New authors of dissension spring; from him
Two branches, that in hosting long contend
For sov'reign sway. Philips.

3. The first writer of any thing; distinct from the translator or compiler.

To stand upon every point in particulars, belongeth to the first author of the story. 2 Macc. ii. 30.

An author has the choice of his own thoughts and words, which a translator has not. Dryden.

4. A writer in general.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm
That the land Salike lies in Germany. Shaksp.

AUTHO'RITATIVE, åw-*th*ôr'è-tà-tîv. adj. [from authority.]

1. Having due authority.

2. Having an air of authority.

I dare not give them the authoritative title of aphorisms, which yet may make a reasonable moral prognostick. Wotton.

The mock authoritative manner of the one, and the insipid mirth of the other. Swift's Examiner.

AUTHO'RITATIVELY, åw-*th*ôr'è-tà-tîv-lè. adv. [from authoritative.]

1. In an authoritative manner; with a shew of authority.

2. With due authority.

No law foreign binds in England, till it be received and authoritatively engrafted into the law of England. Hale.

AUTHO'RITATIVENESS, åw-*th*ôr'è-tà-tîv-nês. n. s. [from authoritative.] An acting by authority; authoritative appearance. Dict.

AUTHO'RITY, åw-*th*ôr'è-tè. n. s. [auctoritas, Lat.]

1. Legal power.

Idle old man,
That still would manage those authorities
That he hath giv'n away! Shaksp. K. Lear.

Adam's sovereignty, that by virtue of being proprietor of the whole world, he had any authority over men, could not have been inherited by any of his children. Locke.

2. Influence; credit.

Power arising from strength, is always in those that are governed, who are many: but authority arising from opinion, is in those that govern, who are few. Temple.

The woods are fitter to give rules than cities, where those that call themselves civil and rational, go out of their way by the authority of example. Locke.

3. Power; rule.

I know, my lord,
If law, authority, and pow'r deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio. Shaksp.

But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence. 1 Tim.

4. Support; justification; countenance.

Dost thou expect th' authority of their voices,
Whose silent wills condemn thee? Ben Jonson.

5. Testimony.

Something I have heard of this, which I would be glad to find by so sweet an authority confirmed. Sidney.

We urge authorities in things that need not, and introduce the testimony of ancient writers, to confirm things evidently believed. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Having been so hardy as to undertake a charge against the philosophy of the schools, I was liable to have been overborne by a torrent of authorities. Glanville's Scepsis.

6. Weight of testimony; credibility; cogency of evidence.

They consider the main consent of all the churches in the whole world, witnessing the sacred authority of scriptures, ever sithence the first publication thereof, even till this present day and hour. Hooker.

AUTHORIZA'TION, âw-thò-rè-zâ'shŭn. n. s. [from authorize.] Establishment by authority.

The obligation of laws arises not from their matter, but from their admission and reception, and authorization in this kingdom. Hale.

To AU'THORIZE, âw'thò-rize. v. a. [autoriser, Fr.]

1. To give authority to any person.

Making herself an impudent suitor, authorizing herself very much, with making us see, that all favour and power depended upon her. Sidney.

Deaf to complaints, they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis authorize their skill. Dryden.

2. To make any thing legal.

Yourself first made that title which I claim,
First bid me love, and authoriz'd my flame. Dryden.

I have nothing farther to desire,
But Sancho's leave to authorize our marriage. Dryd.

To have countenanced in him irregularity, and disobedience to that light which he had, would have been to have authorized disorder, confusion, and wickedness in his creatures. Locke.

3. To establish any thing by authority.

Lawful it is to devise any ceremony, and to authorize any kind of regiment, no special commandment being thereby violated. Hooker.

Those forms are best which have been longest received and authorized in a nation by custom and use. Temple.

4. To justify; to prove any thing to be right.

All virtue lies in a power of denying our own desires, where reason does not authorize them. Locke.

5. To give credit to any person or thing.

Although their intention be sincere, yet doth it notoriously strengthen vulgar errour, and authorize opinions injurious unto truth. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Be a person in vogue with the multitude, he shall authorize any nonsense, and make incoherent stuff, seasoned with twang and tautology, pass for rhetorick. South.

AUTO'CRASY, âw-tôk'râ-sè. [618] n. s. [αὐτοκράτεια, from αὐτὸς self, and κράτος power.] Independent power; supremacy. Dict.

AUTO'PTICAL, âw-tôp'tè-kâl. adj. [from autopsy.] Perceived by one's own eyes.

AUTO'PTICALLY, âw-tôp'tè-kâl-lè. adv. [from autoptical.] By means of one's own eyes.

Were this true, it would autoptically silence that dispute. Brown.

That the galaxy is a meteor, was the account of Aristotle; but the telescope hath autoptically confuted it; and he, who is not Pyrrhonian enough to the disbelief of his senses, may see that it is no exhalation. Glanville's Scepsis.

A'UTUMN, âw'tŭm. [411] n. s. [autumnus, Lat.] The season of the year between summer and winter, beginning astronomically at the equinox, and ending at the solstice; popularly, autumn comprises August, September, and October.

For I will board her, though she chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack. Shaksp.

I would not be over-confident, till he hath passed a spring or autumn. Wiseman's Surgery.

The starving brood,
Void of sufficient sustenance, will yield
A slender autumn. Philips.

Autumn, nodding o'er the yellow plain,
Comes jovial on. Thomson.

AUTU'MNAL, âw-tŭm'nâl. adj. [from autumn.] Belonging to autumn; produced in autumn.

No spring or summer's beauty hath such grace,
As I have seen in one autumnal face. Donne.

Thou shalt not long
Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
Or lightning, thou shalt fall. Milton.

Bind now up your autumnal flowers, to prevent sudden gusts, which will prostrate all. Evelyn.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows. Pope.

AVU'LSION, â-vŭl'shŭn. n. s. [avulsio, Lat.] The act of pulling one thing from another.

Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow
Redundant; but the thronging clusters thin
By kind avulsion. Philips.

The pressure of any ambient fluid can be no intelligible cause of the cohesion of matter; though such a pressure may hinder the avulsion of two polished superficies one from another, in a line perpendicular to them. Locke.

AUXE'SIS, âwg-zè'sis. [478 620] n. s. [Lat.] An increasing; an exornation, when, for amplification, a more grave and magnificent word is put instead of the proper word. Smith's Rhetorick.

AUXI'LIAR, âwg-zil'yâr. [478] } adj.] from AUXI'LIARY, âwg-zil'yâ-rè. } auxilium, Lat.] Assistant; helping; confederate.

The giant brood,
That fought at Thebes and Ilium on each side,
Mix'd with auxiliar gods. Milton's Par. Lost.

Their tractates are little auxiliary unto ours, nor afford us any light to detenebrate this truth. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

There is not the smallest capillary vein but it is present with, and auxiliary to it, according to its use. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Nor from his patrimonial heav'n alone
Is Jove content to pour his vengeance down;
Aid from his brother of the seas he craves,
To help him with auxiliary waves. Dryden.

AUXI'LIAR, âwg-zil'yâr. [478] } n. s. [from AUXI'LIARY, âwg-zil'yâ-rè. } auxilium, Lat.] Helper; assistant; confederate.

In the strength of that power, he might, without the auxiliaries of any further influence, have determined his will to a full choice of God. South.

There are, indeed, a sort of underling auxiliaries to the difficulty of a work, called commentators and criticks. Pope.

AUXI'LIARY Verb, âwg-zil'yâ-rè. A verb that helps to conjugate other verbs.

In almost all languages, some of the commonest nouns and verbs have many irregularities; such are the common auxiliary verbs, to be and to have, to do and to be done, &c. Watts.

Awaits the falling of the murd'ring knife. Fairfax.

Betwixt the rocky pillars Gabriel sat,
Chief of th' angelic guards, awaiting night. Milton.

2. To attend; to be in store for.

To shew thee what reward
Awaits the good; the rest, what punishment. Milton.

Unless his wrath be appeased, an eternity of torments awaits the objects of his displeasure. Rogers.

AWA'IT, â-wâte. n. s. [from the verb.] Ambush. See WAIT.

And least mishap the most bliss alter may:
For thousand perils lie in close await
About us daily, to work our decay. Spenser.

To AWA'KE, â-wâke'. v. a. [þeccian, Sax. To awake has the preterite awoke, or as we now more commonly speak, awaked.]

1. To rouse out of sleep.

Take heed,
How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shaksp.

Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep. John, xi. 11.

2. To raise from any state resembling sleep.

Hark, hark, the horrid sound
Has rais'd up his head:
As awak'd from the dead,
And amaz'd, he stares around. Dryd. St. Cæcilia.

3. To put into new action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
And strive your excellent self to excel. F. Queen.

The fair
Repairs her smiles, awakens ev'ry grace,
And calls forth all the wonders of her face. Pope.

To AWA'KE, â-wâke'. v. n. To break from sleep; to cease to sleep.

Alack, I am afraid they have awak'd,
And 'tis not done! Shaks. Macbeth.

I awaked up last of all, as one that gathereth after the grape gatherers. Ecclus. xxxiii. 16.

AWA'KE, â-wâke'. adj. [from the verb.] Not being asleep; not sleeping.

Imagination is like to work better upon sleeping men, than men awake. Bacon.

Cares shall not keep him on the throne awake,
Nor break the golden slumbers he would take. Dryden.

To AWA'KEN, â-wà'kn.[103] v. a. and v. n. The same with Awake.

Awake Argantyr, Hervor the only daughter
Of thee and Suafu doth awaken thee. Hickes.

To AWA'RD, â-wârd'. v. a. [derived by Skinner, somewhat improbably, from þeapþ, Sax. towards.] To adjudge; to give any thing by a judicial sentence.

A pound of that same merchant's flesh is thine;
The court awards it, and the law doth give it.
Shaksp.

It advances that grand business, and according to which their eternity hereafter will be awarded.
Decay of Piety.

A church which allows salvation to none without it, nor awards damnation to almost any within it.
South.

Satisfaction for every affront cannot be awarded by stated laws. Collier on Duelling.

To AWA'RD, â-wârd'. v. n. To judge; to determine.

Th' unwise award to lodge it in the tow'rs,
An off'ring sacred. Pope's Odyssey.

AWA'RD, â-wârd'. n. s. [from the verb.] Judgment; sentence; determination.

Now hear th' award, and happy may it prove
To her, and him who best deserves her love. Dryd.

Affection bribes the judgment, and we cannot expect an equitable award, where the judge is made a party. Glanville.

To urge the foe,
Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,
Were to refuse th' awards of Providence.
Addison's Cato.

AWA'RE, â-wâre'. adv. [from a and ware, an old word for cautious; it is however, perhaps, an adjective; ȝeþapian, Sax.] Excited to caution; vigilant; in a state of alarm; attentive.

Ere I was aware, I had left myself nothing but the name of a king. Sidney.

Ere sorrow was aware, they made his thoughts bear away something else besides his own sorrow.
Sidney's Arcadia.

Temptations of prosperity insinuate themselves so that we are but little aware of them, and less able to withstand them. Atterbury.

To AWA'RE, âwâre'. v. n. To beware; to be cautious.

So warn'd he them aware themselves; and Instant, without disturb, they took alarm. P. Lost.

This passage is by others understood thus: He warned those, who were aware, of themselves.

AWA'Y, â-wày'. adv. [apeȝ, Sax.]

1. In a state of absence; not in any particular place.

They could make
Love to your dress, although your face were away.
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

It is impossible to know properties that are so annexed to it, that any of them being away, that essence is not there. Locke.

2. From any place or person.

I have a pain upon my forehead here——
——Why that's with watching; 'twill away again.
Shaksp.

When the fowls came down upon the carcases, Abraham drove them away again. Gen. xv. 11.

Would you youth and beauty stay,
Love hath wings, and will away. Waller.
Summer suns roll unperceiv'd away. Pope.

3. Let us go.

Away, old man; give me thy hand; away;
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en;
Give me thy hand. Come on. Shaksp. King Lear.

4. Begone.

Away, and glister like the god of war,
When he intendeth to become the field.
Shaksp. King John.

I'll to the woods among the happier brutes:
Come, let's away; hark, the shrill horn resounds.
Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

Away, you flatt'rer!
Nor change his gen'rous meaning.
Rowe's Jane Shore.

5. Out of one's own hands; into the power of something else.

It concerns every man, who will not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, to inquire into these matters. Tillotson.

6. It is often used with a verb; as, to drink away an estate; to idle away a manor; that is, to drink or idle till an estate or manor is gone.

He play'd his life away. Pope.

7. On the way; on the road: perhaps this is the original import of the following phrase.

Sir Valentine, whither away so fast. Shaksp.

8. Perhaps the phrase, he cannot away with, may mean, he cannot travel with; he cannot bear the company.

She never could away with me.——Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide master Shallow. Shaksp.

9. Away with. Throw away; take away.

If you dare think of deserving our charms,
Away with your sheephooks, and take to your arms.
Dryden.

AWE, âw. n. s. [eȝe, oȝa, Saxon.] Reverential fear; reverence.

They all be brought up idly, without awe of parents, without precepts of masters, and without fear of offence. Spenser's State of Ireland.

This thought fixed upon him who is only to be feared, God; and yet with a filial fear, which at the same time both fears and loves. It was awe without amazement, and dread without distraction. South.

What is the proper awe and fear, which is due from man to God? Rogers.

To AWE, âw. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with reverence, or fear; to keep in subjection.

If you will work on any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him; or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weaknesses and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him. Bacon.

Why then was this forbid? Why, but to awe?
Why, but to keep you low and ignorant,
His worshippers? Milton.

Heav'n that hath placed this Island to give law,
To balance Europe, and her states to awe. Waller.

The rods and axes of princes and their deputies, may awe many into obedience; but the fame of their goodness, justice, and other virtues, will work on more. Atterbury.

A'WFUL, âw'fûl.[173] [406] adj. [from awe and full.]

1. That which strikes with awe, or fills with reverence.

So awful, that with honour thou may'st love
Thy mate; who sees, when thou art seen least wise.
Milton's Par. Lost.

I approach thee thus and gaze
Insatiate; I thus single; nor have fear'd
Thy awful brow, more awful thus retir'd,
Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair! Milton.

2. Worshipful; in authority; invested with dignity. This sense is obsolete.

Know, then, that some of us are gentlemen,
Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth
Thrust from the company of awful men. Shaksp.

3. Struck with awe; timorous; scrupulous. This sense occurs but rarely.

It is not nature and strict reason, but a weak and awful reverence for antiquity, and the vogue of fallible men. Watts.

A'WFULLY, âw'fûl-lè. adv. [from awful.] In a reverential manner.

It will concern a man, to treat this great principle awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids. South.

A'WFULNESS, âw'fûl-nès. n. s. [from awful.]

1. The quality of striking with awe; solemnity.

These objects naturally raise seriousness; and night heightens the awfulness of the place, and pours out her supernumerary horrours upon every thing.
Addison.

2. The state of being struck with awe; little used.

An help to prayer, producing in us reverence and awfulness to the divine majesty of God.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

To AWHA'PE, â-hwâpe'. v. a. [This word I have met with only in Spenser, nor can I discover whence it is derived; but imagine, that the Teutonic language had anciently wapen to strike, or some such word, from which weapons, or offensive arms, took their denomination.] To strike; to confound; to terrify;

Ah! my dear gossip, answer'd then the ape,
Deeply do your sad words my wits awhape,
Both for because your grief doth great appear,
And eke because myself am touched near.
Hubberd's Tales.

AWHI'LE, â-hwile'.[397] adv. [This word, generally reputed an adverb, is only a while, that is, a time, an interval.] Some time; some space of time.

Stay, stay, I say;
And if you love me, as you say you do,
Let me persuade you to forbear awhile. Shaksp.

Into this wild abyss the wary fiend
Stood on the brink of hell, and look'd awhile, Pond'ring his voyage. Milton's Par. Lost.

AWK, âwk'. adj. [A barbarous contraction of the word awkward.] Odd; out of order.

We have heard as arrant jangling in the pulpits, as the steeples; and professors ringing as awk as the bells to give notice of the conflagration. L'Estrange.

A'WKWARD, âwk'wûrd.[475] adj. [æþapd, Saxon; that is, backward, untoward.]

1. Inelegant; unpolite; untaught; ungenteel.

Proud Italy,
Whose manners still our tardy, apish nation
Limps after in base awkward imitation. Shaksp.

Their own language is worthy their care; and they are judged of by their handsome or awkward way of expressing themselves in it. Locke.

An awkward shame, or fear of ill usage, has a share in this conduct. Swift.

2. Unready; unhandy; not dexterous; clumsy.

Slow to resolve, but in performance quick;
So true, that he was awkward at a trick. Dryden.

3. Perverse; untoward.

A kind and constant friend
To all that regularly offend;
But was implacable, and awkward,
To all that interlop'd and hawker'd. Hudibras.

A'WKWARDLY, âwk'wûrd-lè. adv. [from awkward.] Clumsily; unreadily; inelegantly; ungainly.

Dametas nodding from the waist upwards, and swearing he never knew man go more awkwardly to work. Sidney.

When any thing is done awkwardly, the common saying will pass upon them, that it is suitable to their breeding. Locke.

If any pretty creature is void of genius, and would perform her part but awkwardly, I must nevertheless insist upon her working. Addison.

She still renews the ancient scene;
Forgets the forty years between;
Awkwardly gay, and oddly merry;
Her scarf pale pink, her head-knot cherry. Prior.

If a man be taught to hold his pen awkwardly, yet writes sufficiently well, it is not worth while to teach him the accurate methods of handling that instrument. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

A'WKWARDNESS, âwk'wûrd-nês. n. s [from awkward.] Inelegance; want of gentility; oddness; unsuitableness.

One may observe awkwardness in the Italians, which easily discovers their airs not to be natural. Addison.

All his airs of behaviour have a certain awkwardness in them; but these awkward airs are worn away in company. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

AWL, âll. n. s. [æle, ale, Sax.] A pointed instrument to bore holes.

He which was minded to make himself a perpetual servant, should, for a visible token thereof, have also his ear bored through with an awl. Hooker.

You may likewise prick many holes with an awl, about a joint that will lie in the earth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'WLESS, âw'lês. adj. [from awe, and the negative less.]

1. Wanting reverence; void of respectful fear.

Against whose fury, and th' unmatched force,
The awless lion could not wage the fight. Shaksp.
He claims the bull with awless insolence,
And having seiz'd his horns, accosts the prince. Dryden.

2. Wanting the power of causing reverence.

Ah me! I see the ruin of my house;
The tiger now hath seized the gentle hind;
Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless throne. Shaksp. Rich. III.

AWME, or AUME, âwm. n. s. A Dutch measure of capacity for liquids, containing eight stechans, or twenty verges or verteels; answering to what in England is called a tierce, or one-sixth of a ton of France, or one-seventh of an English ton. Arbuthnot.

AWN, âwn. n. s. [arista, Lat.] The beard growing out of the corn or grass. Chambers.

A'WNING, âw'nîng.[410] n. s. A cover spread over a boat or vessel, to keep off the weather.

Of these boards I made an awning over me. Robinson Crusoe.

And she said, the Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he awoke out of his sleep. Judges, xvi. 20.

AWO'RK, â-wûrk'.[165] adv. [from a and work] On work; into a state of labour; into action.

So after Pyrrhus' pause,
Aroused vengeance sets him new awork. Shaksp.
By prescribing the condition, it sets us awork to the performances of it, and that by living well. Hammond.

AWO'RKING, â-wûrk'îng. adj. [from awork.] Into the state of working.

Long they thus travelled, yet never met
Adventure which might them aworking set. Hubberd's Tale.

AWRY', â-rî.[474] adv. [from a and wry.]

1. Not in a straight direction; obliquely.

But her sad eyes, still fast'ned on the ground,
Are governed with goodly modesty;
That suffers not one look to glance awry,
Which may let in a little thought unsound. Spenser.
Like perspectives, which rightly gaz'd upon,
Shew nothing but confusion; eyed awry,
Distinguish form. Shakspeare's Richard II.
A violent cross wind, from either coast,
Blows them transverse, ten thousand leagues awry
Into the devious air. Milton.

2. Asquint; with oblique vision.

You know the king
With jealous eyes has look'd awry
On his son's actions. Denham's Sophy.

3. Not in the right or true direction.

I hap to step awry, where I see no path, and can discern but few steps afore me. Brerewood.

4. Not equally between two points; unevenly.

Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,
Not Cynthia when her manteau's pinn'd awry,
E'er felt such rage. Pope.

5. Not according to right reason; perversely.

All awry, and which wried it to the most wry course of all, wit abused, rather to feign reason why it should be amiss, than how it should be amended. Sidney.

Much of the soul they talk, but all awry,
And in themselves seek virtue, and to themselves
All glory arrogate, to God give none. Milton.

AXE, âks. n. s. [eax, acꝛe, Sax. ascia, Lat.] An instrument consisting of a metal head, with a sharp edge, fixed in a helve or handle, to cut with.

No metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Shakspeare.
There stood a forest on the mountain's brow,
Which overlook'd the shaded plains below;
No sounding axe presum'd these trees to bite,
Coeval with the world; a venerable sight. Dryd.

AXI'LLA, âg-zîl'lâ. n. s. [axilla, Lat.] The cavity under the upper part of the arm, called the arm-pit. Quincy.

AXI'LLAR, âg-zîl'lâr.[478] } adj. [from axil-
A'XILLARY, âg-zîl'lâ-rê, } la, Lat.] Belonging to the arm-pit.

Axillary artery is distributed unto the hand; below the cubit, it divideth into two parts. Brown.

A'XIOM, âks'yûm.[479] n. s. [axioma, Lat. ἀξίωμα, from ἀξιόω, Gr.]

1. A proposition evident at first sight, that cannot be made plainer by demonstration.

Axioms, or principles more general, are such as this, that the greater good is to be chosen before the lesser. Hooker.

2. An established principle to be granted without new proof.

The axioms of that law, whereby natural agents are guided, have their use in the moral. Hooker.
Their affirmations are no axioms; we esteem thereof as things unsaid, and account them but in list of nothing. Brown.

A'XIS, âk'sîs. n. s. [axis, Lat.] The line real or imaginary that passes through any thing, on which it may revolve.

But since they say our earth, from morn to morn,
On its own axis is oblig'd to turn;
That swift rotation must disperse in air
All things which on the rapid orb appear. Blackmore.
It might annually have compass'd the sun, and yet never have once turned upon its axis. Bentley.
On their own axis as the planets run,
And make at once their circle round the sun;
So two consistent motions act the soul,
And one regards itself, and one the whole. Pope.

A'XLE, âk'sl.[405] } n. s. [axis, Lat.]
A'XLE-TREE, âk'sl-trêê. } The pin which passes through the midst of the wheel, on which the circumvolutions of the wheel are performed.

Venerable Nestor
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakspeare.
The fly sat upon the axle-tree of the chariot-wheel, and said, What a dust do I raise! Bacon.
And the gilded car of day
His glowing axle doth allay
In the steep Atlantick stream. Milton.
He saw a greater sun appear,
Than his bright throne or burning axle-tree could bear. Milton's Christ's Nativity.

AY, âê.[105] adv. [perhaps from aio, Lat.]

1. Yes; an adverb of answering affirmatively.

Return you thither?———
—Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed. Shakspeare.
What say'st thou? Wilt thou be of our consort?
Say ay, and be the captain of us all. Shakspeare.

2. It is a word by which the sense is enforced; even; yes, certainly; and more than that.

Remember it; and let it make thee crest fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. Shakspeare.

AYE, âê. adv. [apa, Saxon.] Always; to eternity; for ever. It is now rarely used, and only in poetry.

And now in darksome dungeon, wretched thrall
Remedyless for aye he doth him hold. Fairy Queen.
Either prepare to die,
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For aye, austerity and single life. Shakspeare.
The soul, though made in time, survives for aye;
And, though it hath beginning, sees no end. Sir J. Davies.
And hears the muses, in a ring,
Aye round about Jove's altars sing. Milton.
Th' astonish'd mariners aye ply the pump;
No stay, nor rest, till the wide breach is clos'd. Philips.

A'YGREEN, âê'grêên. n. s. The same with house-leek, which see. Dict.

A'YRY, â'rê. n. s. The nest of the hawk.

A'ZIMUTH, âz'ê-mûth. n. s. [Arab.]

1. The azimuth of the sun, or of a star, is an arch between the meridian of the place, and any given vertical line.
2. Magnetical Azimuth, is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun's azimuth circle and the magnetical meridian; or it is the apparent distance of the sun from the north or south point of the compass.
3. Azimuth Compass is an instrument used at sea for finding the sun's magnetick azimuth.
4. Azimuth Dial is a dial whose stile or gnomon is at right angles to the plane of the horizon.
5. Azimuths, called also vertical circles, are great circles intersecting each other in the zenith and nadir, and cutting the

A'ZURE, á'zhûre.[484] [461] adj. [azur, Fr. azurro, Span. lazur, Arab. from lazuli, a blue stone.] Blue; faint blue.

Like pomels round of marble clear,
Where azur'd veins well mixt appear. Sidney.

The blue of the first order, though very faint and little, may be the colour of some substance; and the azure colour of the skies seems to be this order. Newton.

Thus replies
Minerva, graceful with her azure eyes. Pope.

The sea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain,
Your empire owns. Thomson.

B.

B, THE second letter of the English alphabet, is pronounced as in most other European languages, by pressing the whole length of the lips together, and forcing them open with a strong breath. It has a near affinity with the other labial letters; and is confounded by the Germans with P, and by the Gascons with V; from which an epigrammatist remarks, that bibere and vivere are in Gascony the same. The Spaniards, in most words, use B or V indifferently.

BAA, bâ.[77] n. s. [See the verb.] The cry of a sheep.

—Therefore thou art a sheep.———
Such another proof would make me cry baa. Shaksp.

To BAA, bâ. v. n. [balo, Lat.] To cry like a sheep.

Or like a lamb, whose dam away is fet,
He treble baas for help, but none can get. Sidney.

To BA'BBLE, bâb'bl.[405] v. n. [babbelen, Germ. babiller, Fr.]

1. To prattle like a child; to prate imperfectly.

My babbling praises I repeat no more;
But hear, rejoice, stand silent, and adore. Prior.

2. To talk idly, or irrationally.

John had conned over a catalogue of hard words; these he used to babble indifferently in all companies. Arbuthnot.

Let the silent sanctuary show,
What from the babbling schools we may not know. Prior.

3. To talk thoughtlessly; to tell secrets.

There is more danger in a reserved and silent friend, than in a noisy babbling enemy. L'Estrange.

4. To talk much.

The babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns;
As, if a double hunt were heard at once. Shaksp.

And had I pow'r to give that knowledge birth,
In all the speeches of the babbling earth. Prior.

The babbling echo had descry'd his face;
She, who in other's words her silence breaks. Addison.

BA'BBLE, bâb'bl. n. s. [babil, Fr.] Idle talk; senseless prattle.

This babble shall not henceforth trouble me:
Here is a coil with protestation. Shakspeare.

Come, no more!
This is mere moral babble. Milton.

With volleys of eternal babble,
And clamour more unanswerable. Hudibras.

The babble, impertinence, and folly, I have taken notice of in disputes. Glanville.

BA'BBLEMENT, bâb'bl-mênt. n. s. [from babble.] Senseless prate; empty words.

Deluded all this while with ragged notions and babblements, while they expected worthy and delightful knowledge. Milton.

BA'BBLER, bâb'blûr.[98] n. s. [from babble.]

1. An idle talker; an irrational prattler.

We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a babbler. Shakspeare.

The apostle had no sooner proposed it to the masters at Athens, but he himself was ridiculed as a babbler. Rogers.

2. A teller of secrets.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd;
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime. Fairy Queen.

Great babblers, or talkers, are not fit for trust. L'Estrange.

BABE, bâbe. n. s. [baban, Welsh; babbaerd, Dutch; bambino, Italian.] An infant; a child of either sex.

Those that do teach your babes
Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks:
He might have chid me so; for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding. Shakspeare.

Nor shall Sebastian's formidable name
Be longer us'd, to lull the crying babe. Dryden.

The babe had all that infant care beguiles;
And early knew his mother in her smiles. Dryden.

BA'BERY, bâ'bûr-rè.[555] n. s. [from babe.] Finery, to please a babe or child.

So have I seen trim books in velvet dight,
With golden leaves and painted babery
Of seely boys, please unacquainted sight. Sidney.

BA'BISH, bâ'bîsh. adj. [from babe.] Childish.

If he be bashful, and will soon blush, they call him a babish and ill-brought up thing. Ascham.

BABO'ON, bâ-bôôn'. n. s. [babouin, Fr. It is supposed by Skinner to be the augmentation of babe, and to import a great babe.] A monkey of the largest kind.

You had looked through the grate like a geminy of baboons. Shakspeare.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a baboon. Addison.

BA'BY, bâ'bè. n. s. [See BABE.]

1. A child; an infant.

The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum. Shakspeare.

The child must have sugar-plums, rather than make the poor baby cry. Locke.

He must marry, and propagate: the father cannot stay for the portion; nor the mother, for babes to play with. Locke.

2. A small image, in imitation of a child, which girls play with.

The archduke saw that Perkin would prove a runnagate; and it was the part of children to fall out about babies. Bacon.

Since no image can represent the great Creator; never think to honour him by your foolish puppets, and babies of dirt and clay. Stillingfleet.

BA'CCATED, bâk'kâ-têd. adj. [baccatus, Lat.] Beset with pearls; having many berries. Dict.

BACCHANA'LIAN, bâk'kâ-nâ'lè-ân. n. s. [from bacchanalia, Lat.] A riotous person; a drunkard.

BA'CCHANALS, bâk'kâ-nâlz. n. s. [bacchanalia, Lat.] The drunken feasts and revels of Bacchus, the god of wine.

Ha, my brave emperor! shall we dance now the Egyptian bacchanals, and celebrate our drink? Shakspeare.

What wild fury was there in the heathen bacchanals, which we have not seen equalled? Decay of Piety.

Both extremes were banish'd from their walls;
Carthusian fasts, and fulsome bacchanals. Pope.

BA'CCHUS BOLE, bâk'kûs-bôle. n. s. A flower, not tall, but very full and broad-leaved. Mortimer.

BACCI'FEROUS, bâk-sîf'è-rûs.[555] adj. [from bacca a berry, and fero to bear, Lat.] Berry-bearing.

Bacciferous trees are of four kinds.

1. Such as bear a caliculate or naked berry; the flower and calix both falling off together, and leaving the berry bare; as the sassafras trees.

2. Such as have a naked monospermous fruit; that is, containing in it only one seed; as the arbutes.

3. Such as have but polyspermous fruit; that is, containing two or more kernels or seeds within it; as the jesminum, ligustrum.

4. Such as have their fruit composed of many acini, or round soft balls, set close together like a bunch of grapes; as the uva marina. Ray.

BACCI'VOROUS, bâk-sîv'vò-rûs. adj. [from bacca a berry, and voro to devour, Lat.] Devouring berries. Dict.

BA'CHELOR, bâtsh'è-lûr. n. s. [This is a word of very uncertain etymology; it not being well known, what was its original sense. Junius derives it from βάκχηλος foolish; Menage, from bas chevalier a knight of the lowest rank; Spelman, from baculus a staff; Cujas, from buccella an allowance of provision. The most probable derivation seems to be from bacca laurûs, the berry of a laurel or bay; bachelors being young, are of good hopes, like laurels in the berry. Dr. Lawrence observed, that Menage's etymology is much confirmed by the practice in our universities of calling a Bachelor, Sir. In Latin, baccalaureus.]

1. A man unmarried.

Such separation
Becomes a virtuous bachelor and a maid. Shaksp.

The haunting of dissolute places, or resort to courtesans, are no more punished in married men, than in bachelors. Bacon.

A true painter naturally delights in the liberty which belongs to the bachelor's estate. Dryden.

Let sinful bachelors their woes deplore;
Full well they merit all they feel, and more. Pope.

2. A man who takes his first degrees at the university in any profession.

Being a boy, new bachelor of arts, I chanced to speak against the pope. Ascham.

I appear before your honour, in behalf of Martinus Scriblerus, bachelor of physic. Mart. Scriblerus.

3. A knight of the lowest order. This is a sense now little used.

BA'CHELORSHIP, bâtsh'ê lûr-ship. n. s. [from bachelor.] The condition of a bachelor.

Her mother, living yet, can testify,
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship. Shaksp.

BACK, bâk'. n. s. [bac, bæc, Sax. bach, Germ.]

1. The hinder part of the body, from the neck to the thighs.

Part following enter; part remain without,
And mount on others backs, in hopes to share. Dryden.

2. The outer part of the hand when it is shut: opposed to the palm.

Methought love pitying me, when he saw this,
Gave me your hands, the backs and palms to kiss. Donne.

3. The outward part of the body; that which requires clothes: opposed to the belly.

Those who, by their ancestors, have been set free from a constant drudgery to their backs and their bellies, should bestow some time on their heads. Locke.

4. The rear: opposed to the van.

He might conclude, that Walter would be upon the king's back, as his majesty was upon his. Clarendon.

5. The place behind.

As the voice goeth round, as well towards the back as towards the front of him that speaketh, so does the echo; for you have many back echoes to the place where you stand. Bacon.

Antheus, Sergestus grave, Cleanthus strong,
And at their backs a mighty Trojan throng. Dryden.

6. The part of any thing out of sight.

Trees set upon the backs of chimnies do ripen fruit sooner. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

7. The thick part of any tool opposed to the edge; as the back of a knife or sword: whence backsword, or sword with a back; as,

Bull dreaded not old Lewis either at backsword, single faulchion, or cudgel-play. Arbuthnot.

8. To turn the back on one; to forsake him, or neglect him.

At the hour of death, all friendships of the world bid him adieu, and the whole creation turns its back upon him. South.

9. To turn the back; to go away; to be not within the reach of taking cognizance.

His back was no sooner turned, but they returned to their former rebellion. Sir J. Davies.

BACK, bâk'. adv. [from the noun.]

1. To the place from which one came.

Back you shall not to the house, unless
You undertake that with me. Shakspeare.

5. Again; in return.

The lady's mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
Take and give back affairs, and their dispatch,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing. Shakspeare.

6. Again; a second time.

This Cæsar found, and that ungrateful age,
With losing him, went back to blood and rage. Waller.

The epistles being written from ladies forsaken by their lovers, many thoughts came back upon us in divers letters. Dryden.

To BACK, bâk. v. a. [from the noun back.]

1. To mount on the back of a horse.

That roan shall be my throne.
Well, I will back him strait. O Esperance!
Bid Butler lead him forth into the park. Shaksp.

2. To break a horse; to train him to bear upon his back.

Direct us how to back the winged horse;
Favour his flight, and moderate his course. Roscommon.

3. To place upon the back.

As I slept, methought
Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back'd,
Appear'd to me. Shakspeare.

4. To maintain; to strengthen; to support; to defend.

Belike he means,
Back'd by the pow'r of Warwick, that false peer,
T' aspire unto the crown. Shakspeare.

In the dark backward or abysm of time? Shaksp.

BA'CKWARDLY, bâk'wûrd-lê. adv. [from backward.]

1. Unwillingly; aversely; with the back forward.

Like Numid lions by the hunters chas'd,
Though they do fly, yet backwardly do go
With proud aspect, disdaining greater haste. Sidney.

2. Perversely; or with cold hope.

I was the first man
That e'er receiv'd gift from him;
And does he think so backwardly of me,
That I'll requite it last? Shakspeare.

BA'CKWARDNESS, bâk'wûrd-nês. n. s. [from backward.]

1. Dulness; unwillingness; sluggishness.

The thing by which we are apt to excuse our backwardness to good works, is the ill success that hath been observed to attend well-designing charities. Atterbury.

2. Slowness of progression; tardiness.

BA'CON, bâ'kn.[170] n. s. [probably from baken, that is, dried flesh.]

1. The flesh of a hog salted and dried.

High o'er the hearth a chine of bacon hung,
Good old Philemon seiz'd it with a prong,
Then cut a slice. Dryden.

2. To save the bacon, is a phrase for preserving one's self from being hurt; borrowed from the care of housewives in the country, where they have seldom any other provision in the house than dried bacon, to secure it from the marching soldiers.

What frightens you thus, my good son? says the priest;
You murder'd, are sorry, and have been confest.
O father! my sorrow will scarce save my bacon;
For 'twas not that I murder'd but that I was taken. Prior.

BAD, bâd. adj. [guaad, Dutch; compar. worse; superl. worst.]

1. Ill; not good; a general word used in regard to physical or moral faults, either of men or things.

Most men have politicks enough to make, through violence, the best scheme of government a bad one. Pope.

2. Vicious; corrupt.

Thou may'st repent,
And one bad act, with many deeds well done,
Thus will the latter, as the former, world
Still tend from bad to worse. Milton.
Our unhappy fates
Mix thee amongst the bad, or make thee run
Too near the paths which virtue bids thee shun. Prior.

3. Unfortunate; unhappy.

The sun his annual course obliquely made,
Good days contracted, and enlarg'd the bad. Dryd.

4. Hurtful; unwholesome; mischievous; pernicious: with for.

Reading was bad for his eyes, writing made his head ake. Addison.

5. Sick: with of; as, bad of a fever.

BAD, bâd. }
BADE, bâd.[75] } The preterite of bid.

And for an earnest of greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee Thane of Cawder. Shakspeare.

BADGE, bâdje.[74] n. s. [A word of uncertain etymology; derived by Junius from bode or bade a messenger, and supposed to be corrupted from badage, the credential of a messenger; but taken by Skinner and Minshew from bagghe, Dut. a jewel, or bague, Fr. a ring. It seems to come from bajulo, to carry, Lat.]

1. A mark or cognizance worn to shew the relation of the wearer to any person or thing.

But on his breast a bloody cross he bore,
The dear resemblance of his dying lord;
For whose sweet sake that glorious badge he wore. Spenser.
The outward splendour of his office, is the badge and token of that sacred character which he inwardly bears. Atterbury.

2. A token by which one is known.

A savage tygress on her helmet lies;
The famous badge Clarinda us'd to bear. Fairfax.

3. The mark or token of any thing.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness. Shakspeare.
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge. Shaksp.
Let him not bear the badges of a wreck,

To BADGE, bâdje. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark as with a badge.

Your royal father's murder'd——
——Oh, by whom?——
Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had don't:
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers. Shakspeare.

BA'DGER, bâd'jûr.[98] n. s. [bedour, Fr. melis, Lat.] An animal that earths in the ground, used to be hunted.

That a brock, or badger, hath legs of one side shorter than the other, is received not only by theorists and unexperienced believers, but most who behold them daily. Brown.

BA'DGER, bâd'jûr. n. s. [perhaps from the Latin bajulus, a carrier; but by Junius derived from the badger, a creature who stows up his provision.] One that buys corn and victuals in one place, and carries it unto another. Cowell.

BA'DGER-LEGGED, bâd'jûr-lêgd. [389] adj. [from badger and legged.] Having legs of an unequal length, as the badger is supposed to have.

His body crooked all over, big-bellied, badger-legged, and his complexion swarthy. L'Estrange

BA'DLY, bâd-lê. adv. [from bad.] In a bad manner; not well.

How goes the day with us? O tell me, Hubert.—Badly, I fear. How fares your majesty? Shaksp.

BAD'NESS, bâd'nês. n. s. [from bad.] Want of good qualities, either natural or moral; desert; depravity.

It was not your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set a work by a reprovable badness in himself. Shaksp.

There is one convenience in this city, which makes some amends for the badness of the pavement. Addison on Italy.

I did not see how the badness of the weather could be the king's fault? Addison.

To BA'FFLE, bâf'fl. [405] v. a. [baffler, Fr.]

1. To elude; to make ineffectual.

They made a shift to think themselves guiltless, in spite of all their sins; to break the precept, and at the same time to baffle the curse. South.

He hath deserved to have the grace withdrawn, which he hath so long baffled and defied. Atterbury.

2. To confound; to defeat with some confusion, as by perplexing or amusing: to baffle is sometimes less than to conquer.

Etruria lost,
He brings to Turnus' aid his baffled host. Dryden.

When the mind has brought itself to close thinking, it may go on roundly. Every abstruse problem, every intricate question, will not baffle, discourage, or break it. Locke.

A foreign potentate trembles at a war with the English nation, ready to employ against him such revenues as shall baffle his designs upon their country. Addison.

B'AFFLE, bâf'fl. [405] n. s. [from the verb.] A defeat.

It is the skill of the disputant that keeps off a baffle. South.

The authors having missed of their aims, are fain to retreat with frustration and a baffle. South.

BA'FFLER, bâf'flûr. [98] n. s. [from baffle.] He that puts to confusion, or defeats.

Experience, that great baffler of speculation, assures us the thing is too possible, and brings, in all ages, matter of fact to confute our suppositions. Government of the Tongue.

BAG, bâg. n. s. [belge, Sax. from whence perhaps, by dropping, as is usual, the harsh consonant, came bege, bage, bag.]

1. A sack, or pouch, to put any thing in, as money, corn.

Cousin, away for England; haste before,
And ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their imprison'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakspeare.

What is it that opens thy mouth in praises? Is it that thy bags and thy barns are full? South.

Waters were inclosed within the earth, as in a bag. Burnet.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke. Pope.

2. That part of animals in which some particular juices are contained, as the poison of vipers.

The swelling poison of the several sects,
Which, wanting vent, the nation's health infects,
Shall burst its bag. Dryden

Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd;
So may thy cows their burden'd bags distend. Dryd.

3. An ornamental purse of silk tied to men's hair.

We saw a young fellow riding towards us full gallop, with a bob wig and black silken bag tied to it. Addison.

4. A term used to signify different quantities of certain commodities; as, a bag of pepper, a bag of hops.

To BAG, bâg. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into a bag.

Accordingly he drain'd those marshy grounds,
And bagg'd them in a blue cloud. Dryden.

Hops ought not to be bagged up hot. Mortimer.

2. To load with a bag.

Like a bee, bagg'd with his honey'd venom,
He brings it to your hive. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

To BAG, bâg. v. n. To swell like a full bag.

The skin seemed much contracted, yet it bagged, and had a porringer full of matter in it. Wiseman.

Two kids that in the valley stray'd
I found by chance, and to my fold convey'd:
They drain two bagging udders every day. Dryden.

BA'GATELLE, bâg-â-têl'. n. s. [bagatelle, Fr.] A trifle; a thing of no importance; a word not naturalized.

Heaps of hair rings and cypher'd seals;
Rich trifles, serious bagatelles. Prior.

BA'GGAGE, bâg'gidje. [90] n. s. [from bag; baggage, Fr.]

1. The furniture and utensils of an army.

The army was an hundred and seventy thousand footmen, and twelve thousand horsemen, beside the baggage. Judith.

Riches are the baggage of virtue; they cannot be spared, nor left behind, but they hinder the march. Bacon.

They were probably always in readiness, and carried among the baggage of the army. Addison on Italy.

2. The goods that are to be carried away, as bag and baggage.

Dolabella designed, when his affairs grew desperate in Egypt, to pack up bag and baggage, and sail for Italy. Arbuthnot.

3. A worthless woman; in French bagaste; so called, because such women follow camps.

A spark of indignation did rise in her, not to suffer such a baggage to win away any thing of hers. Sidney.

When this baggage meets with a man who has vanity to credit relations, she turns him to account. Spectator.

BA'GNIO, bân'yô. [388] n. s. [bagno, Ital. a bath.] A house for bathing, sweating, and otherwise cleansing the body.

I have known two instances of malignant fevers produced by the hot air of a bagnio. Arbuthnot on Air.

BA'GPIPE, bâg'pipe. n. s. [from bag and pipe; the wind being received in a bag.] A musical instrument, consisting of a leathern bag, which blows up like a football, by means of a port-vent or little tube fixed to it, and stopped by a valve and three pipes or flutes; the first called the great pipe or drone, and the second the little one, which pass the wind out only at the bottom; the third has a reed, and is played on by compressing the bag under the arm, when full; and opening or stopping the holes, which are eight, with the fingers. The bagpipe takes in the compass of three octaves. Chambers.

No banners but shirts, with some bad bagpipes instead of drum and fife. Sidney.

He heard a bagpipe, and saw a general animated with the sound. Addison's Freeholder.

BAGPI'PER, bâg'pi-pûr. [98] n. s. [from bagpipe.] One that plays on a bagpipe.

Some that will evermore peep thro' their eyes,
And laugh, like parrots, at a bagpiper. Shaksp.

BAGUE'TTE, bâ-gêt'. [381] n. s. [Fr. a term of architecture.] A little round moulding, less than an astragal; sometimes carved and enriched.

To BAIGNE, bâîn. v. a. [bagner, Fr.] To drench; to soak: a word out of use.

The women forslow not to baigne them, unless they plead their heels, with a worse perfume than Jugurth found in the dungeon. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

BAIL, bâle. n. s. [Of this word the etymologists give many derivations; it seems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand; to deliver up, as a man delivers himself up in surety.]

Bail is the freeing or setting at liberty one arrested or imprisoned upon action either civil or criminal, under security taken for his appearance. There is both common and special bail; common bail is in actions of small prejudice, or slight proof, called common, because any sureties in that case are taken: whereas, upon causes of greater weight, or apparent specialty, special bail or surety, must be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainprise; for he that is mainprised is at large, until the day of his appearance: but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and custody for the time: and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in prison at that time, or otherwise at their will. Cowell.

Worry'd with debts, and past all hopes of bail,
Th' unpity'd wretch lies rotting in a jail. Roscommon.

And bribe with presents, or, when presents fail,
They send their prostituted wives for bail. Dryden.

To BAIL, bâle. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give bail for another.

Let me be their bail——
They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer their suspicion——
Thou shalt not bail them. Shakspeare's Titus Andron.

2. To admit to bail.

When they had bailed the twelve bishops who were in the Tower, the house of Commons, in great indignation, caused them immediately to be recommitted to the Tower. Clarendon.

BA'ILABLE, bâ'lâ-bl. [405] adj. [from bail.] That may be set at liberty by bail or sureties.

BA'ILIFF, bâ'lîf. n. s. [a word of doubtful etymology in itself, but borrowed by us from baillie, Fr.]

1. A subordinate officer.

Lausanne is under the canton of Berne, governed by a bailiff sent every three years from the senate of Berne. Addison.

2. An officer whose business it is to execute arrests.

It many times happeneth, that, by the under-sheriffs and their bailiffs, the owner hath incurred the forfeiture, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process that runneth against him. Bacon.

A bailiff by mistake, seized you for a debtor, and kept you the whole evening in a spunging-house. Swift.

Swift as a bard the bailiff leaves behind. Pope.

3. An under-steward of a manor.

BA'ILIWICK, bâ'lê-wîk. n. s. [of baillie, Fr. and pic. Sax.] The place of the jurisdiction of a bailiff within his hundred, or the lord's franchise. It is that liberty which is exempted from the sheriff of the county, over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff. Cowell.

A proper officer is to walk up and down his bailiwick. Spenser.

There issued writs to the sheriffs, to return the names of the several land-owners in their several bailiwicks. Hale.

To BAIT, båte, v. a. [batan, Sax. baitzen, Germ.]

1. To put meat upon a hook, in some place, to tempt fish, or other animals.

Oh cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
With saints dost bait thy hook! most dangerous
Is that temptation that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.

Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, give him a show of comfort in his suit, and lead him on with a sure baited delay, till he hath pawned his horses to mine host of the garter. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Many sorts of fishes feed upon insects, as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray.

How are the sex improv'd in am'rous arts!
What new found snares they bait for human hearts! Gay.

2. To give meat to one's self, or horses, on the road.

What so strong,
But, wanting rest, will also want of might?
The sun, that measures heaven all day long,
At night doth bait his steeds the ocean waves among. Spenser.

To BAIT, båte. v. a. [from battre, Fr. to beat.]

1. To attack with violence.

Who seeming sorely chaffed at his band,
As chained bear, whom cruel dogs do bait,
With idle force did fain them to withstand. Fairy Queen.

I will not yield
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
And to be baited with the rabble's curse. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

2. To harass by the help of others; as, we bait a boar with mastiffs, but a bull with bull-dogs.

To BAIT, båte. v. n. To stop at any place for refreshment: perhaps this word is more properly bate, to abate speed.

But our desires tyrannical extortion
Doth force us there to set our chief delightfulness,
Where but a baiting place is all our portion. Sidney.

As one who on his journey baits at noon,
Tho' bent on speed: so here th' archangel paus'd. Milton.

In all our journey from London to his house, we did not so much as bait at a whig inn. Addison, Spectator.

To BAIT, båte. v. n. [as an hawk.] To clap the wings; to make an offer of flying; to flutter.

All plum'd like estridges, that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats like images. Shaksp.

Hood my unman'd blood baiting in my cheeks
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold,
Thinks true love acted simple modesty. Shaksp.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her as we watch those kites
That bait and beat, and will not be obedient. Shaksp.

BAIT, båte. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Meat set to allure fish, or other animals, to a snare.

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait. Shaksp.

2. A temptation; an enticement; allurement.

And that same glorious beauty's idle boast
Is but a bait such wretches to beguile. Spenser.

Taketh therewith the souls of men, as with the baits. Hooker.

Sweet words, I grant, baits and allurements sweet,
But greatest hopes with greatest crosses meet. Fairfax.

Fruit, like that
Which grew in Paradise, the bait of Eve
Us'd by the tempter. Milton.

Secure from foolish pride's affected state,
And specious flattery's more pernicious bait. Roscommon.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was tied above:
Sweet negligence! unheeded bait of love! Dryden.

Grant that others could with equal glory
Look down on pleasures, and the baits of sense. Addison.

3. A refreshment on a journey.

BAIZE, båze. n. s. A kind of coarse open cloth stuff, having a long nap; sometimes frized on one side, and sometimes not frized. This stuff is without wale, being wrought on a loom with two treddles, like flannel. Chambers.

To BAKE, båke. v. a. participle passive, baked or baken. [bæcan, Sax. becken, Germ. supposed by Wachter to come from bec, which, in the Phrygian language, signified bread.]

1. To heat any thing in a close place; generally in an oven.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread. Isaiah.

The difference of prices of bread proceeded from their delicacy in bread, and perhaps something in their manner of baking. Arbuthnot.

2. To harden in the fire.

The work of the fire is a kind of baking; and whatsoever the fire baketh, time doth, in some degree, dissolve. Bacon.

3. To harden with heat.

With vehement suns
When dusky summer bakes the crumbling clods,
How pleasant is't, beneath the twisted arch,
To ply the sweet carouse! Philips.

The sun with flaming arrows pierc'd the flood,
And, darting to the bottom, bak'd the mud. Dryden.

To BAKE, båke. v. n.

1. To do the work of baking.

I keep his house, and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds, and do all myself. Shakspeare.

2. To be heated or baked.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shaksp. Macbeth.

BAKED Meats, båkd mètes. Meats dressed by the oven.

There be some houses, wherein sweetmeats will relent, and baked meats will mould, more than others. Bacon.

BA'KEHOUSE, båke'hôûse. n. s. [from bake and house.] A place for baking bread.

I have marked a willingness in the Italian artizans, to distribute the kitchen, pantry, and bake-house under ground. Wotton.

BA'KEN, bå'kn.[170] The participle from To bake.

There was a cake baken on the coals, and a cruse of water at his head. 1 Kings.

BA'KER, bå'kûr.[98] n. s. [from To bake.] He whose trade is to bake.

In life and health, every man must proceed upon trust, there being no knowing the intention of the cook or baker. South.

BA'LANCE, bål'lânse. n. s. [balance, Fr. bilanx, Lat.]

1. One of the six simple powers in mechanicks, used principally for determining the difference of weight in heavy bodies. It is of several forms. Chambers.

2. A pair of scales.

A balance of power, either without or within a state, is best conceived by considering what the nature of a balance is. It supposes three things; first, the part which is held, together with the hand that holds it; and then the two scales, with whatever is weighed therein. Swift.

For when on ground the burden balance lies,
The empty part is lifted up the higher. Sir J. Davies.

3. A metaphorical balance, or the mind employed in comparing one thing with another.

I have an equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrong our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer:
Griefs heavier than our offences. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

4. The act of comparing two things, as by the balance.

Comfort arises not from others being miserable, but from this inference upon the balance, that we suffer only the lot of nature. L'Estrange.

Upon a fair balance of the advantages on either side, it will appear, that the rules of the gospel are more powerful means of conviction than such message. Atterbury.

5. The overplus of weight; that quantity by which, of two things weighed together, one exceeds the other.

Care being taken, that the exportation exceed in value the importation; and then the balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

6. That which is wanting to make two parts of an account even; as, he stated the account with his correspondent, and paid the balance.

7. Equipoise; as, balance of power. See the second sense.

Love, hope, and joy, fair pleasure's smiling train;
Hate, fear, and grief, the family of pain;
These mix'd with art, and to due bounds confin'd,
Make and maintain the balance of the mind. Pope.

8. The beating part of a watch.

It is but supposing that all watches, whilst the balance beats, think; and it is sufficiently proved, that my watch thought all last night. Locke.

9. [In astronomy.] One of the twelve signs of the zodiack, commonly called Libra.

Or wilt thou warm our summers with thy rays,
And seated near the balance poise the days? Dryden.

To BA'LANCE, bål'lânse. v. a. [balancer, Fr.]

1. To weigh in a balance, either real or figurative; to compare by the balance.

If men would but balance the good and the evil of things, they would not venture soul and body for dirty interest. L'Estrange.

2. To regulate the weight in a balance; to keep in a state of just proportion.

Heav'n that hath placed this Island to give law,
To balance Europe, and her states to awe. Waller.

3. To counterpoise; to weigh equal to; to be equipollent; to counteract.

The attraction of the glass is balanced, and rendered ineffectual, by the contrary attraction of the liquor. Newton.

4. To regulate an account, by stating it on both sides.

Judging is balancing an account, and determining on which side the odds lie. Locke.

5. To pay that which is wanting to make the two parts of an account equal.

Give him leave
To balance the account of Blenheim's day. Prior.

Though I am very well satisfied, that it is not in my power to balance accounts with my Maker, I am resolved, however, to turn all my endeavours that way. Addison, Spectator.

To BA'LANCE, bâl'lânse. v. n. To hesitate; to fluctuate between equal motives, as a balance plays when charged with equal weights.

Were the satisfaction of lust, and the joys of heaven, offered to any one's present possession, he would not balance, or err, in the determination of his choice. Locke.

Since there is nothing that can offend, I see not why you should balance a moment about printing it. Atterbury to Pope.

BA'LANCER, bâl'lân-sûr. n. s. [from balance.] The person that weighs any thing.

BA'LASS Ruby, bâl'âs-rû'bê. n. s. [balas, Fr. supposed to be an Indian term.] A kind of ruby.

Balass ruby is of a crimson colour, with a cast of purple, and seems best to answer the description of the ancients. Woodward on Fossils.

To BALBU'CINATE, bâl-bû'sê-nâte. v. n. [from balbutio, Lat.] To stammer in speaking. Dict.

To BALBU'TIATE, bâl-bû'sê-âte. v. n. The same with balbucinate. Dict.

BALCO'NY, bâl-kô'nê. n. s. [balcon, Fr. balcone, Ital.] A frame of iron, wood, or stone, before the window of a room.

Then pleasure came, who liking not the fashion,
Began to make balconies, terraces,
Till she had weaken'd all by alteration. Herbert.

When dirty waters from balconies drop,
And dext'rous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop. Gay.

BALD, bâwld. adj. [bal, Welsh.]

1. Wanting hair; despoiled of hair by time or sickness.

Neither shall men make themselves bald for them. Jeremiah.

I find it remarked by Marchetti, that the cause of baldness in men is the dryness of the brain, and its shrinking from the skull; he having observed, that in bald persons, under the bald part, there was a vacuity between the skull and the brain. Ray.

He should imitate Cæsar, who, because his head was bald, covered that defect with laurels. Addison.

2. Without natural covering.

Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity. Shakspeare.

3. Without the usual covering.

He is set at the upper end o' th' table; but they stand bald before him. Shakspeare.

4. Unadorned; inelegant.

Hobbes, in the preface to his own bald translation, begins the praise of Homer when he should have ended it. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

And that, though labour'd, line must bald appear,
That brings ungrateful musick to the ear. Creech.

5. Mean; naked; without dignity; without value; bare.

What should the people do with these bald tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience fails
To th' greater bench. Shakspeare.

6. Bald was used by the northern nations to signify the same as audax, bold; and is still in use. So Baldwin, and by inversion Winbald, is bold conqueror; Ethelbald, nobly bold; Badbald, happily bold; which are of the same import as Thraseas, Thrasymachus, and Thrasybulus, &c. Gibson.

BA'LDACHIN, bâwld'âtsh-în. n. s. [baldachino, Ital.] A piece of architecture, in form of a canopy, supported with columns, and serving as a covering to an altar. It properly signifies a rich silk, Du Cange, and was a canopy carried over the host. Builder's Dict.

BA'LDERDASH, bâwl'dûr-dâsh. n. s. [probably of bald, Sax. bold, and dash, to mingle.] Any thing jumbled together without judgment; rude mixture; a confused discourse.

To BA'LDERDASH, bâwl'dûr-dâsh. v. a. [from the noun.] To mix or adulterate any liquor.

BA'LDLY, bâwld'lê. adv. [from bald.] Nakedly; meanly; inelegantly.

BA'LDMONY, bâwld'mûn-nê. n. s. The same with GENTIAN.

BA'LDNESS, bâwld'nês. n. s. [from bald.]

1. The want of hair.

2. The loss of hair.

Which happen'd on the skin to light,
And there corrupting to a wound,
Spreads leprosy and baldness round. Swift.

3. Meanness of writing; inelegance.

BA'LDRICK, bâwl'drîk. n. s. [Of uncertain etymology.]

1. A girdle. By some Dictionaries it is explained a bracelet; but I have not found it in that sense.

Athwart his breast a baldrick brave he ware,
That shin'd, like twinkling stars, with stones most precious rare. Fairy Queen.

A radiant baldrick, o'er his shoulders tied,
Sustain'd the sword that glitter'd at his side. Pope.

2. The zodiack.

That like the twins of Jove, they seem'd in sight,
Which deck the baldrick of the heavens bright. Spenser.

BALE, bâle. n. s. [balle, Fr.] A bundle or parcel of goods packed up for carriage.

One hired an ass in the dog-days, to carry certain bales of goods to such a town. L'Estrange.

It is part of the bales in which bohea tea was brought over from China. Woodward.

BALE, bâle. n. s. [bæl. Sax. bale, Dan. bal, bol, Icelandish.] Misery; calamity.

She look'd about, and seeing one in mail
Armed to point, sought back to turn again;
For light she hated as the deadly bale. Fairy Queen.

To BALE, bâle. v. a. A word used by the sailors, who bid bale out the water; that is, lave it out, by way of distinction from pumping. Skinner. I believe from bailler, Fr. to deliver from hand to hand.

To BALE, bâle. v. n. [emballer, Fr. imballure, Ital.] To make up into a bale.

BA'LEFUL, bâle'fûl. adj. [from bale.]

1. Full of misery; full of grief; sorrowful; sad; woful.

Ah, luckless babe! born under cruel star,
And in dead parents baleful ashes bred. Fairy Q.

But when I feel the bitter baleful smart,
Which her fair eyes unwares do work in me,
I think that I a new Pandora see. Spenser.

Round he throws his baleful eyes,
That witness'd huge affliction and dismay,
Mix'd with obdurate pride and stedfast hate. Milton.

2. Full of mischief; destructive.

But when he saw his threat'ning was but vain,
He turn'd about, and search'd his baleful books again. Fairy Queen.

Boiling choler chokes,
By sight of these, our baleful enemies. Shakspeare.

Unseen, unfelt, the fiery serpent skims
Betwixt her linen and her naked limbs;
His baleful breath inspiring as he glides. Dryden.

Happy Ierne, whose most wholesome air
Poisons envenom'd spiders, and forbids
The baleful toad and vipers from her shore. Philips.

BA'LEFULLY, bâle'fûl-lê. adv. [from baleful.] Sorrowfully; mischievously.

BALK, bâwk.[402] [84] n. s. [balk, Dut. and Germ.] A great beam, such as is used in buildings; a rafter over an out-house or barn.

BALK, bâwk. n. s. [derived by Skinner from valicare, Ital. to pass over.] A ridge of land left unploughed between the furrows, or at the end of the field.

To BALK, bâwk.[402] v. a. [See the noun.]

1. To disappoint; to frustrate; to elude.

Another thing in the grammar schools I see no use of, unless it be to balk young lads in learning languages. Locke.

Every one has a desire to keep up the vigour of his faculties, and not to balk his understanding by what is too hard for it. Locke.

But one may balk this good intent,
And take things otherwise than meant. Prior.

The prices must have been high; for a people so rich would not balk their fancy. Arbuthnot.

Balk'd of his prey, the yelling monster flies,
And fills the city with his hideous cries. Pope.

Is there a variance? enter but his door,
Balk'd are the courts, and contest is no more. Pope.

2. To miss any thing; to leave untouched.

By grisly Pluto he doth swear,
He rent his clothes, and tore his hair;
And as he runneth here and there,
An acorn cup he greeteth;
Which soon he taketh by the stalk,
About his head he lets it walk,
Nor doth he any creature balk,
But lays on all he meeteth. Drayton's Nymphid.

3. To omit or refuse any thing.

This was looked for at your hand, and this was balkt. Shakspeare.

4. To heap, as on a ridge. This, or something like this, seems to be intended here.

Ten thousand bold Scots, three and twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did Sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains. Shakspeare.

BA'LKERS, bâw'kûrz.[98] n. s. [In fishery.] Men who stand on a cliff, or high place on the shore, and give a sign to the men in the fishing-boats, which way the passage or shoal of herrings is. Cowell.

The pilchards are pursued by a bigger fish, called a plusher, who leapeth above water, and bewrayeth them to the balker. Carew's Sur. of Corn.

BALL, bâwl.[33] [77] n. s. [bol, Dan. bol. Dut.]

Bal, diminutively Belin, the sun, or Apollo of the Celtæ, was called by the ancient Gauls Abellio. Whatever was round, and in particular the head, was called by the ancients either Bal, or Bel, and likewise Bol and Bil. Among the modern Persians, the head is called Pole; and the Flemings still call the head Boile. Πολος is the head or poll; and πωλειν is to turn. Βολος likewise signifies a round ball, whence bowl, and bell, and ball, which the Welsh term bêl. By the Scotch also the head is named bhêl; whence the English bill is derived, signifying the beak of a bird. Figuratively, the Phrygians and Thurians by βαλλον understood a king. Hence also, in the Syriack dialects, βαιλ, βωλ, and likewise βαλ, signifies lord, and by this name also the sun; and, in some dialects, Ηλ and Ιλ, whence Ιλος and Ηλιος, Γηλιος and Βηλιος, and also, in the Celtick diminutive way of expression, Ελενος, Γελενος, and Βελενος, signified the sun; and Ελενη, Γελενη, and Βελενη, the moon. Among the Teutonicks, hol and heil have the same meaning; whence the adjective holig, or heilig is derived, and signifies divine or holy; and the aspiration being changed into s, the Romans form their Sol. Baxter.

1. Any thing made in a round form, or approaching to round.

Worms with many feet round themselves into balls under logs of timber, but not in the timber. Bacon.

Nor arms they wear, nor swords and bucklers wield,
But whirl from leathern strings huge balls of lead. Dryden.

Like a ball of snow tumbling down a hill, he gathered strength as he passed. Howel.

Still unripen'd in the dewy mines,
Within the ball a trembling water shines,
That through the crystal darts. Addison.

Such of those corpuscles as happened to combine into one mass, formed the metallick and mineral balls, or nodules, which we find. Woodward.

2. A round thing to play with, either with the hand or foot, or a racket.

Balls to the stars, and thralls to fortune's reign,
Turn'd from themselves, infected with their cage,
Where death is fear'd, and life is held with pain. Sidney.

Those I have seen play at ball, grow extremely earnest who should have the ball. Sidney.

3. A small round thing, with some particular mark, by which votes are given, or lots cast.

Let lots decide it.
For every number'd captive put a ball
Into an urn; three only black be there,
The rest, all white, are safe. Dryden.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rowls,
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryd.

4. A globe; as, the ball of the earth.

Julius and Antony, those lords of all,
Low at her feet present the conquer'd ball. Granv.

Ye gods, what justice rules the ball?
Freedom and arts together fall. Pope.

5. A globe borne as an ensign of sovereignty.

Hear the tragedy of a young man, that by right ought to hold the ball of a kingdom; but, by fortune, is made himself a ball, tossed from misery to misery, from place to place. Bacon.

6. Any part of the body that approaches to roundness; as, the lower and swelling part of the thumb; the apple of the eye.

Be subject to no sight but mine; invisible
To every eye ball else. Shakspeare.

To make a stern countenance, let your brow bend so, that it may almost touch the ball of the eye. Peacham.

7. The skin spread over a hollow piece of wood, stuffed with hair or wool, which the printers dip in ink, to spread it on the letters.

BALL, bâwl. n. s. [bal, Fr. from balare, low Lat. from βαλλίζειν to dance.] An entertainment of dancing, at which the preparations are made at the expense of some particular person.

If golden sconces hang not on the walls,
To light the costly suppers and the balls. Dryden.

He would make no extraordinary figure at a ball; but I can assure the ladies, for their consolation, that he has writ better verses on the sex than any man. Swift.

BA'LLAD, bâl'lâd. n. s. [balade, Fr.] A song.

Ballad once signified a solemn and sacred song, as well as trivial, when Solomon's Song was called the ballad of ballads; but now it is applied to nothing but trifling verse. Watts.

An' I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, may a cup of sack be my poison. Shakspeare.

Like the sweet ballad, this amusing lay
Too long detains the lover on his way. Gay.

To BA'LLAD, bâl'lâd. v. n. [from the noun.] To make or sing ballads.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets, and scall'd rhimers Ballad us out o' tune. Shakspeare.

BA'LLAD-SINGER, bâl'lâd-sîng-ûr. n. s. [from ballad and sing.] One whose employment is to sing ballads in the streets.

No sooner 'gan he raise his tuneful song,
But lads and lasses round about him throng.
Not ballad-singer, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet, and loud. Gay.

BA'LLAST, bâl'lâst.[88] n. s. [ballaste, Dutch.]

1. Something put at the bottom of the ship, to keep it steady to the centre of gravity.

There must be middle counsellors to keep things steady; for, without that ballast, the ship will roul too much. Bacon.

As for the ascent of a submarine vessel, this may be easily contrived, if there be some great weight at the bottom of the ship, being part of its ballast; which, by some cord within, may be loosened from it. Wilkins.

As, when empty barks on billows float,
With sandy ballast sailors trim the boat;
So bees bear gravel stones, whose poising weight
Steers through the whistling winds their steddy flight. Dryden.

2. That which is used to make any thing steady.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

To BA'LLAST, bâl'lâst.[88] v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put weight at the bottom of a ship, in order to keep her steady.

If this be so ballasted, as to be of equal weight with the like magnitude of water, it will be moveable. Wilkins.

2. To keep any thing steady.

While thus to ballast love I thought,
And so more steddily t' have gone,
I saw I had love's pinnace overfraught. Donne.

Now you have given me virtue for my guide,
And with true honour ballasted my pride. Dryden.

BALLE'TTE, bâl'lêt. n. s. [ballette, Fr.] A dance in which some history is represented.

BA'LLIARDS, bâl'yûrdz.[113] n. s. [from ball, and yard, or stick to push it with.] A play at which a ball is driven by the end of a stick: now corruptly called billiards.

With dice, with cards, with balliards, far unfit,
With shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit. Spenser.

BA'LLISTER, bâl'ûs-tûr. See BALUSTRE.

BALLO'N, BALLO'ON, } bâl-lôôn'. n. s. [ballon, Fr.]

1. A large round short-necked vessel used in chymistry.

2. [In architecture.] A ball or globe placed on the top of a pillar.

3. [In fireworks.] A ball of pasteboard, stuffed with combustible matter, which, when fired, mounts to a considerable height in the air, and then bursts into bright sparks of fire, resembling stars.

BA'LLOT, bâl'lût.[166] n. s. [ballote, Fr.]

1. A little ball or ticket used in giving votes, being put privately into a box or urn.

2. The act of voting by ballot.

To BA'LLOT, bâl'lût.[166] v. n. [balloter, Fr.] To choose by ballot, that is, by putting little balls or tickets, with particular marks, privately in a box; by counting which, it is known what is the result of the poll, without any discovery by whom each vote was given.

No competition arriving to a sufficient number of balls, they fell to ballot some others. Wotton.

Giving their votes by balloting, they lie under no awe. Swift.

BALLOTA'TION, bâl-lô-tâ'shûn, n. s. [from ballot.] The act of voting by ballot.

The election is intricate and curious, consisting of ten several ballotations. Wotton.

BALM, bâm.[403] n. s. [baume, Fr. balsamum, Lat.]

1. The sap or juice of a shrub remarkably odoriferous.

Balm trickles through the bleeding veins
Of happy shrubs, in Idumean plains. Dryden.

2. Any valuable or fragrant ointment.

Thy place is fill'd, thy sceptre wrung from thee;
Thy balm wash'd off wherewith thou wast anointed. Shakspeare.

3. Any thing that sooths or mitigates pain.

You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms apply'd to you. Shakspeare.

Your praise's argument, balm of your age;
Dearest and best. Shakspeare.

A tender smile, our sorrow's only balm. Young.

BALM, bâm. } n. s. [melissa.
BALM Mint, bâm-mînt. } Lat.] The name of a plant.

The species are, 1. Garden balm. 2. Garden balm, with yellow variegated flowers. 3. Stinking Roman balm, with softer hairy leaves. Miller.

BALM of Gilead, bâm-ôv-gîl'yâd.

1. The juice drawn from the balsam tree, by making incisions in its bark. Its colour is first white, soon after green; but, when it comes to be old, it is of the colour of honey. The smell of it is agreeable, and very penetrating; the taste of it bitter, sharp, and astringent. As little issues from the plant by incision, the balm sold by the merchants is made of the wood and green branches of the tree, distilled by fire, which is generally adulterated with turpentine. Calmet.

It seems to me, that the zori of Gilead, which we render in our Bible by the word balm, was not the same with the balsam of Mecca, but only a better sort of turpentine, then in use for the cure of wounds and other diseases. Prideaux's Connections.

2. A plant remarkable for the strong balsamick scent which its leaves emit, upon being bruised; whence some have supposed, erroneously, that the balm of Gilead was taken from this plant. Miller.

To BALM, bâm. v. a. [from balm.]

1. To anoint with balm, or with any thing medicinal.

Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood. Shakspeare.

2. To sooth; to mitigate; to assuage.

Opprest nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balm'd thy senses. Shaksp.

BA'LMY, bâm'è.[403] adj. [from balm.]

1. Having the qualities of balm.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid,

in balmy sweat; which with his beams the sun
Soon dry'd. Milton.

2. Producing balm.

Let India boast her groves, nor envy we
The weeping amber, and the balmy tree. Pope.

3. Soothing; soft; mild.

Come, Desdemona! 'tis the soldiers' life
To have their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife.
Shakspeare.

Such visions hourly pass before my sight,
Which from my eyes their balmy slumbers fright.
Dryden.

4. Fragrant; odoriferous.

Those rich perfumes which from the happy shore
The winds upon their balmy wings convey'd,
Whose guilty sweetness first the world betray'd.
Dryden.

First Eurus to the rising morn is sent,
The regions of the balmy continent. Dryden.

5. Mitigating: assuasive.

Oh balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword! Shakspeare.

Ba'lneary, bål'nė-å-rė. n. s. [balnearium, Lat.] A bathing-room.

The balnearies, and bathing-places, he exposeth unto the summer setting. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Balnea'tion, bål-nė-å'shŭn. n. s. [from balneum, Lat. a bath.] The act of bathing.

As the head may be disturbed by the skin, it may the same way be relieved, as is observable in balneations and fomentations of that part. Brown.

Ba'lneatory, bål'nė-å-tŭr-rė.[512] [567] adj. [balnearius, Lat.] Belonging to a bath or stove.

Ba'lotade, bål-ò-tåde'. n. s. The leap of an horse, so that when his fore-feet are in the air, he shews nothing but the shoes of his hinder-feet, without yerking out. A balotade differs from a capriole; for when a horse works at caprioles, he yerks out his hinder legs with all his force. Farrier's Dict.

Ba'lsam, båwl'sŭm,[88] n. s. [balsamum, Lat.] Ointment; unguent; an unctuous application thicker than oil, and softer than salve.

Christ's blood our balsam; if that cure us here,
Him, when our judge, we shall not find severe.
Denham.

Ba'lsam Apple, båwl'sŭm-åp-pl. [momordica, Lat.] An annual Indian plant.

Ba'lsam Tree, båwl'sŭm-trė̂.

This is a shrub which scarce grows taller than the pomegranate tree; the blossoms are like small stars, very fragrant; whence spring out little pointed pods, inclosing a fruit like an almond, called carpobalsamum, as the wood is called xylobalsamum, and the juice opobalsamum. Calmet.

Balsa'mical, bål-sâm'ė-kål. } adj. [from Balsa'mick, bål-sâm'ik.[509] } balsam.] Having the qualities of balsam; unctuous; mitigating; soft; mild; oily.

If there be a wound in my leg, the vital energy of my soul thrusts out the balsamical humour of my blood to heal it. Hale.

The aliment of such as have fresh wounds ought to be such as keeps the humours from putrefaction, and renders them oily and balsamick. Arbuthnot.

Ba'luster, bål'ŭs-tŭr. n. s. [according to Du Cange, from balaustrium, low Lat. a bathing-place.] A small column or pilaster, from an inch and three quarters to four inches square or diameter. Their dimensions and forms are various; they are frequently adorned with mouldings; they are placed with rails on stairs, and in the fronts of galleries in churches.

This should first have been planched over, and railed about with balusters. Carew.

Ba'lustrade, bål-ŭs-tråde'. n. s. [from baluster.] An assemblage of one or more rows of little turned pillars, called balusters, fixed upon a terras, or the top of a building, for separating one part from another.

Bam, Beam, båm, bėme, being initials in the name of any place, usually imply it to have been woody; from the Saxon beam, which we use in the same sense to this day. Gibson.

Bamboo', båm-bòò'. n. s. An Indian plant of the reed kind. It has several shoots much larger than our ordinary reeds, which are knotty, and separated from space to space by joints. The bamboo is much larger than the sugar-cane.

To Bambo'zle, båm-bòò'zl. v. a. [a cant word not used in pure or in grave writings.] To deceive; to impose upon; to confound.

After Nick had bamboozled about the money, John called for counters. Arbuthnot.

Bambo'zler, båm-bòò'zlŭr. n. s. [from bamboozle.] A tricking fellow; a cheat.

There are a set of fellows they call bahterers and bamboozlers, that play such tricks. Arbuthnot.

Ban, bån. n. s. [ban, Teut. a publick proclamation, as of proscription, interdiction, excommunication, publick sale.]

1. Publick notice given of any thing, whereby any thing is publickly commanded or forbidden. This word we use especially in the publishing of matrimonial contracts in the church, before marriage, to the end that if any man can say against the intention of the parties, either in respect of kindred or otherwise, they may take their exception in time. And, in the canon law, banna sunt proclamationes sponsi et sponsæ in ecclesiis fieri soliti. Cowell.

I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
And I her husband contradict your bans. Shaksp.
To draw her neck into the bans. Hudibras.

2. A curse; excommunication.

Thou mixture rank of midnight weeds collected,
With Hecate's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected.
Shaksp. Hamlet.

A great oversight it was of St. Peter that he did not accurse Nero, whereby the pope might have got all; yet what need of such a ban, since friar Vincent could tell Atabalipa, that kingdoms were the pope's? Raleigh.

3. Interdiction.

Bold deed to eye
The sacred fruit, sacred to abstinence,
Much more to taste it, under ban to touch. Milton.

4. Ban of the Empire; a publick censure by which the privileges of any German prince are suspended.

He proceeded so far by treaty, that he was proffered to have the imperial ban taken off Altapinus, upon submission. Howell.

To Ban, bån v. a. [bannen, Dutch, to curse.] To curse; to execrate.

Shall we think that it baneth the work which they leave behind them, or taketh away the use thereof? Hooker.

It is uncertain whether this word, in the foregoing sense, is to be deduced from ban to curse, or bane to poison.

In thy closet pent up, rue my shame,
And ban our enemies, both mine and thine. Shaksp.

Before these Moors went a Numidian priest, bellowing out charms, and casting scrowls of paper on each side, wherein he cursed and banned the Christians. Knolles.

Bana'na Tree, bå-nå'nå-trė̂. A species of plantain.

Band, bånd. n. s. [bende, Dutch; band, Saxon.]

1. A tie; a bandage; that by which one thing is joined to another.

You shall find the band, that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their amity. Shakspeare.

2. A chain by which any animal is kept in restraint. This is now usually spelt, less properly, bond.

So wild a beast, so tame ytaught to be,
And buxom to his bands, is joy to see. Hub. Tale.
Since you deny him entrance, he demands
His wife, whom cruelly you hold in bands. Dryden.

3. Any means of union or connexion between persons.

Here's eight that must take hands,
To join in Hymen's bands. Shakspeare.

4. Something worn about the neck; a neck-cloth. It is now restrained to a neck-cloth of particular form, worn by clergymen, lawyers, and students in colleges.

For his mind I do not care;
That's a toy that I could spare:
Let his title be but great,
His cloaths rich, and band sit neat. Ben Jonson.

He took his lodging at the mansion-house of a taylor's widow, who washes, and can clear-starch his bands. Addison.

5. Any thing bound round another.

In old statues of stone in cellars, the feet of them being bound with leaden bands, it appeared that the lead did swell. Bacon.

6. [In architecture.] Any flat low member or moulding, called also fascia, face, or plinth.

7. A company of soldiers.

And, good my lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot.
Shakspeare.

8. A company of persons joined together in any common design.

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers.
Shakspeare.

The queen, in white array before her band,
Saluting took her rival by the hand. Dryden.

On a sudden, methought, this select band sprang forward, with a resolution to climb the ascent, and follow the call of that heavenly musick. Tatler.

Strait the three bands prepare in arms to join,
Each band the number of the sacred Nine. Pope.

To Band, bånd. v. a. [from band]

1. To unite together into one body or troop.

The bishop, and the duke of Glo'ster's men,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble stones,
And banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do pelt at one another's pates. Shakspeare.

Some of the boys banded themselves as for the major, and others for the king, who, after six days skirmishing, at last made a composition, and departed. Carew.

They, to live exempt
From Heav'n's high jurisdiction, in new league
Banded against his throne. Milton.

2. To bind over with a band.

And by his mother stood an infant lover,
With wings unfledg'd, his eyes were banded over.
Dryden.

BANDS of a Saddle, bånds, are two pieces of iron nailed upon the bows of the saddle, to hold the bows in the right situation.

BA'NDAGE, bån'dîdje.[90] n. s. [bandage, Fr.]

1. Something bound over another.

Zeal too had a place among the rest, with a bandage over her eyes; though one would not have expected to have seen her represented in snow.
Addison.

Cords were fastened by hooks to my bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck.
Swift's Gulliver.

2. It is used, in surgery, for the fillet or roller wrapped over a wounded member; and, sometimes, for the act or practice of applying bandages.

BA'NDBOX, bånd'bôks. n. s. [from band and box.] A slight box used for bands, and other things of small weight.

My friends are surprised to find two bandboxes among my books, till I let them see that they are lined with deep erudition. Addison.

With empty bandbox she delights to range,
And feigns a distant errand from the 'Change. Gay.

BA'NDELET, bån'dê-lêt. n. s. [bandelet, Fr. in architecture.] Any little band, flat moulding, or fillet.

BA'NDIT, bån'dît. n. s. [bandito, Ital.] A man outlawed.

No savage fierce, bandit, or mountaineer,
Will dare to soil her virgin purity. Milton.

No bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride,
No cavern'd hermit, rests self-satisfy'd. Pope.

BANDI'TTO, bån-dît'tô. n. s. in the plural banditti. [bandito, Ital.]

A Roman sworder, and banditto slave,
Murder'd sweet Tully. Shakspeare.

BA'NDOG, bån'dôg. n. s. [from ban or band, and dog. The original of this word is very doubtful. Caius, De Canibus Britannicis, derives it from band, that is, a dog chained up. Skinner inclines to deduce it from bana, a murderer. May it not come from ban a curse, as we say a curst cur; or rather from baund, swelled or large, a Danish word; from whence, in some counties, they call a great nut a ban-nut?] A kind of large dog.

The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screech-owls cry, and bandogs howl.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Or privy, or pert, if any bin,
We have great bandogs will tear their skin. Spenser.

BANDOLE'ERS, bån-dô-lêêrz.' n. s. [bandouliers, Fr.] Small wooden cases covered with leather, each of them containing powder that is a sufficient charge for a musket.

BA'NDROL, bånd'rôll. n. s. [banderol, Fr.] A little flag or streamer; the little fringed silk flag that hangs on a trumpet.

BA'NDY, bån'dê. n. s. [from bander, Fr.] A club turned round at bottom, for striking a ball at play.

To BA'NDY, bån'dê. v. a. [probably from bandy, the instrument with which they strike balls at play, which, being crooked is named from the term bander; as, bander un arc, to string or bend a bow.]

1. To beat to and fro, or from one to another.

They do cunningly, from one hand to another, bandy the service like a tennis ball. Spenser.

And like a ball bandy'd 'twixt pride and wit,
Rather than yield, both sides the prize will quit.
Denham.

What from the tropicks can the earth repel?
What vigorous arm, what repercussive blow,
Bandies the mighty globe still to and fro. Blackmore.

2. To exchange; to give and take reciprocally.

Do you bandy looks with me, you rascal? Shaksp.

'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To bandy hasty words. Shakspeare.

3. To agitate; to toss about.

This hath been so bandied amongst us, that one can hardly miss books of this kind. Locke.

Ever since men have been united into governments, the endeavours after universal monarchy have been bandied among them. Swift.

Let not obvious and known truth, or some of the most plain and certain propositions, be bandied about in a disputation. Watts.

To BA'NDY, bån'dê. v. n. To contend, as at some game, in which each strives to drive the ball his own way.

No simple man that sees
This factious bandying of their favourites,
But that he doth presage some ill event. Shaksp.

A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy:
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth. Shakspeare.

Could set up grandee against grandee,
To squander time away, and bandy;
Made lords and commoners lay sieges
To one another's privileges. Hudibras.

After all the bandying attempts of resolution, it is as much a question as ever. Glanville.

BA'NDYLEG, bån'dê-lêg. n. s. [from bander, Fr.] A crooked leg.

He tells aloud your greatest failing,
Nor makes a scruple to expose
Your bandyleg, or crooked nose. Swift.

BA'NDYLEGGED, bån'dê-lêgd.[362] adj. [from bandyleg.] Having crooked legs.

The Ethiopians had an one-eyed bandylegged prince; such a person would have made but an odd figure. Collier.

BANE, bâne. n. s. [bana, Sax. a murderer.]

1. Poison.

Begone, or else let me. 'Tis bane to draw
The same air with thee. Ben Jonson.

All good to me becomes
Bane; and in heav'n much worse would be my state.
Milton.

They with speed
Their course through thickest constellations held,
Spreading their bane. Milton.

Thus am I doubly arm'd; my death and life,
My bane and antidote, are both before me:
This, in a moment, brings me to an end;
But that informs me I shall never die. Addison.

2. That which destroys; mischief; ruin.

Insolency must be represt, or it will be the bane of the Christian religion. Hooker.

I will not be afraid of death and bane,
Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane. Shaksp.

Suffices that to me strength is my bane,
And proves the source of all my miseries. Milton.

So entertain'd those odorous sweets the fiend,
Who came their bane. Milton.

Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
The Scipios worth, those thunderbolts of war,
The double bane of Carthage? Dryden.

False religion is, in its nature, the greatest bane and destruction to government in the world. South.

To BANE, bâne. v. a. [from the noun.] To poison.

What if my house be troubled with a rat,
And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats
To have it ban'd? Shakspeare.

BA'NEFUL, bâne'fûl. adj. [from bane and full.]

1. Poisonous.

For voyaging to learn the direful art,
To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
Observant of the gods, and sternly just,
Ilus refus'd t' impart the baneful trust. Pope.

2. Destructive.

The silver eagle too is sent before,
Which I do hope will prove to them as baneful,
As thou conceiv'st it to the commonwealth.
Ben Jonson.

The nightly wolf is baneful to the fold,
Storms to the wheat, to buds the bitter cold. Dryd.

BA'NEFULNESS, bâne'fûl-nês. n. s. [from baneful.] Poisonousness; destructiveness.

BA'NEWORT, bâne'wûrt.[88] n. s. [from bane and wort.] A plant, the same with deadly nightshade.

To BANG, bâng.[409] v. a. [vengolen, Dutch.]

1. To beat; to thump; to cudgel: a low and familiar word.

One receiving from them some affronts, met with them handsomely, and banged them to good purpose.
Howel.

He having got some iron out of the earth, put it into his servants' hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

Formerly I was to be banged because I was too strong, and now because I am too weak to resist; I am to be brought down when too rich, and oppressed when too poor. Arbuthnot.

2. To handle roughly; to treat with violence, in general.

The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts. Shakspeare.

You should accost her with jests fire-new from the mint; you should have banged the youth into dumbness. Shakspeare.

BANG, bâng. n. s. [from the verb.] A blow; a thump; a stroke: a low word.

I am a bachelor.—That's to say, they are fools that marry; you'll bear me a bang for that. Shaksp.

With many a stiff twack, many a bang,
Hard crabtree and old iron rang. Hudibras.

I heard several bangs or buffets, as I thought, given to the eagle that held the ring of my box in his beak. Swift's Gulliver.

To BA'NGLE, bân'gl. v. a. To waste by little and little; to squander carelessly: a word now used only in conversation.

If we bangle away the legacy of peace left us by Christ, it is a sign of our want of regard for him.
Duty of Man.

To BA'NISH, bân'nish. v. a. [banir, Fr. banio, low Lat. probably from ban, Teut. an outlawry, or proscription.]

1. To condemn to leave his own country.

Oh, fare thee well!
Those evils thou repeat'st upon thyself
Have banish'd me from Scotland. Shakspeare.

2. To drive away.

Banish business, banish sorrow,
To the Gods belongs to-morrow. Cowley.

It is for wicked men only to dread God, and to endeavour to banish the thoughts of him out of their minds. Tillotson.

Successless all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love. Pope.

BA'NISHER, bân'ish-ûr. n. s. [from ba- nish.] He that forces another from his own country.

In mere spite,
To be full quit of those my banishers,
Stand I before thee here. Shakspeare.

BA'NISHMENT, bân'nîsh-mênt. n. s. [banissement, Fr.]

1. The act of banishing another; as, he secured himself by the banishment of his enemies.
2. The state of being banished; exile.

Now go we in content
To liberty, and not to banishment. Shakspeare.
Round the wide world in banishment we roam,
Forc'd from our pleasing fields and native home.
Dryden.

BANK, bânk.[409] n. s. [banc, Saxon.]

1. The earth arising on each side of a water. We say, properly, the shore of the sea, and the banks of a river, brook, or small water.

Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath his bank? Shaksp.
Richmond in Devonshire, sent out a boat
Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks,
If they were his assistants. Shakspeare.
A brook whose stream so great, so good,
Was lov'd, was honour'd as a flood;
Whose banks the Muses dwelt upon. Crashaw.
'Tis happy when our streams of knowledge flow
To fill their banks, but not to overthrow. Denham.
O early lost! what tears the river shed,
When the sad pomp along his banks was led! Pope.

2. Any heap of earth piled up.

They besieged him in Abel of Bethmaachah, and they cast up a bank against the city; and it stood in the trench. Samuel.

3. [from banc, Fr. a bench.] A seat or bench of rowers.

Plac'd on their banks, the lusty Trojans sweep
Neptune's smooth face, and cleave the yielding deep. Waller.
Mean time the king with gifts a vessel stores,
Supplies the banks with twenty chosen oars. Dryd.

That banks of oars were not in the same plain, but raised above one another, is evident from descriptions of ancient ships. Arbuthnot.

4. A place where money is laid up to be called for occasionally.

Let it be no bank, or common stock, but every man be master of his own money. Not that I altogether mislike banks, but they will hardly be brooked. Bacon's Essays.
This mass of treasure you should now reduce;
But you your store have hoarded in some bank.
Denham.
Their pardons and indulgences, and giving men a share in saints merits out of the common bank and treasury of the church, which the pope has the sole custody of. South.

5. The company of persons concerned in managing a bank.

Let three hundred pounds be paid her out of my ready money, or bank-bills. Swift.

BA'NKER, bânk'ûr.[98] n. s. [from bank.] One that trafficks in money; one that keeps or manages a bank.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the banker's doors,
To call in money. Dryden.
By powerful charms of gold and silver led,
The Lombard bankers and the 'change to waste.
Dryden.

BA'NKRUPTCY, bânk'rûp-sê.[472] n. s. [from bankrupt.]

1. The state of a man broken, or bankrupt.
2. The act of declaring one's self bankrupt; as, he raised the clamours of his creditors by a sudden bankruptcy.

BA'NKRUPT, bânk'rûpt. adj. [banqueroute, Fr. bancorotto, Ital.] In debt beyond the power of payment.

The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken man.
Shakspeare.
Sir, if you spend word for word with me,
I shall make your wit bankrupt. Shakspeare.

It is said that the money-changers of Italy had benches, probably in the burse or exchange; and that whenany became insolvent, his banco was rotto, his bench was broke. It was once written bankerout. Bankerout is a verb.

Dainty bits
Make rich the ribs, but bankerout the wits. Shaksp.

BA'NKRUPT, bânk'rûpt. n. s. A man in debt, beyond the power of payment.

Perkin gathered together a power, neither in number nor in hardiness contemptible; but, in their fortunes, to be feared, being bankrupts, and many of them felons. Bacon.
It is with wicked men as with a bankrupt: when his creditors are loud and clamorous, and speak big, he giveth them many good words. Calamy.
In vain at court the bankrupt pleads his cause;
His thankless country leaves him to her laws. Pope.

To BA'NKRUPT, bânk'rûpt. v. a. To break; to disable one from satisfying his creditors.

We cast off the care of all future thrift, because we are already bankrupted. Hammond.

BA'NNER, bân'nûr.[98] n. s. [banniere, Fr. banair, Welsh.]

1. A flag; a standard; a military ensign.

From France there comes a power, who already
Have secret seize in some of our best ports,
And are at point to show their open banner. Shaksp.
All in a moment through the gloom were seen
Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
With orient colours waving. Milton.
He said no more;
But left his sister and his queen behind,
And wav'd his royal banner in the wind. Dryden.
Fir'd with such motives, you do well to join
With Cato's foes, and follow Cæsar's banners.
Addison.

Eriphyle here he found
Baring her breast, yet bleeding with the wound. Dryden.

He bar'd an ancient oak of all her boughs;
Then on a rising ground the trunk he plac'd. Dryd.

For virtue, when I point the pen,
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star;
Can there be wanting, to defend her cause,
Lights of the church, or guardians of the laws? Pope.

BARE, or BORE, bâre, or bôre. The preterite of To bear. See To BEAR.

BA'REBONE, bâre'bône. n. s. [from bare and bone.] Lean. so that the bones appear.

The duke of Lancaster is dead;
And living too, for now his son is duke—
——Barely in title, not in revenue. Shaksp. Rich. II.

He barely nam'd the street, promis'd the wine,
But his kind wife gave me the very sign. Donne.

Where the balance of trade barely pays for commodities with commodities, there money must be sent, or else the debts cannot be paid. Locke.

BA'RENESS, bâre'nês. n. s. [from bare.]

1. Nakedness.

So you serve us
Till we serve you; but when you have our roses,
You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves,
And mock us with our bareness. Shaksp.

2. Leanness.

For their poverty, I know not where they had that; and for their bareness, they never learned that of me. Shakspeare.

3. Poverty.

Were it stripped of its privileges, and made as like the primitive church for its bareness as its purity, it could legally want all such privileges. South.

4. Meanness of clothes.

BA'RGAIN, bär'gîn.[208] n. s. [bargen, Welsh; bargaigne, Fr.]

1. A contract or agreement concerning the sale of something.

What is marriage but a very bargain? wherein is sought alliance, or portion, or reputation, with some desire of issue; not the faithful nuptial union of man and wife. Bacon.

No more can be due to me,
Than at the bargain made was meant. Donne.

2. The thing bought or sold; a purchase; the thing purchased.

Give me but my price for the other two, and you shall even have that into the bargain. L'Estrange.

He who is at the charge of a tutor at home, may give his son a more genteel carriage, with greater learning into the bargain, than any at school can do. Locke.

3. Stipulation; interested dealing.

There was a difference between courtesies received from their master and the duke; for that the duke's might have ends of utility and bargain, whereas their master's could not. Bacon.

4. An unexpected reply, tending to obscenity.

Where sold he bargains, whipstitch? Dryden.

As to bargains, few of them seem to be excellent, because they all terminate into one single point. Swift.

No maid at court is less asham'd,
Howe'er for selling bargains fam'd. Swift.

5. An event; an upshot: a low sense.

I am sorry for thy misfortune; however we must make the best of a bad bargain. Arbuthnot.

6. In law.

Bargain and sale is a contract or agreement made for manours, lands, &c. also the transferring the property of them from the bargainer to the bargainee. Cowell.

To BA'RGAIN, bâr'gin. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a contract for the sale or purchase of any thing: often with for before the thing.

Henry is able to enrich his queen,
And not to seek a queen to make him rich.
So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse. Shaksp.

For those that are like to be in plenty, they may be bargained for upon the ground. Bacon.

The thrifty state will bargain ere they fight. Dryd.

It is possible the great duke may bargain for the republick of Lucca, by the help of his great treasures. Addison on Italy.

BARGE, bârje. n. s. [bargie, Dutch, from barga, low Lat.]

1. A boat for pleasure.

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burnt on the water. Shaksp.

Plac'd in the gilded barge,
Proud with the burden of so sweet a charge;
With painted oars the youths begin to sweep
Neptune's smooth face. Waller.

2. A sea commander's boat.

It was consulted, when I had taken my barge and gone ashore, that my ship should have set sail and left me. Raleigh.

3. A boat for burden.

BA'RGER, bâr-jûr.[98] n. s. [from barge.] The manager of a barge.

Many wafarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of this privilege; who again, like the Campellians in the north, and the London bargers, forslow not to baigne them. Carew's Survey.

BARK, bârk. n. s. [barck, Dan.]

1. The rind or covering of a tree.

Trees last according to the strength and quantity of their sap and juice; being well munited by their bark against the injuries of the air. Bacon.

Wand'ring in the dark,
Physicians for the tree have found the bark. Dryden.

2. A small ship. [from barca, low Lat.]

The duke of Parma must have flown, if he would have come into England: for he could neither get bark nor mariner to put to sea. Bacon.

It was that fatal and perfidious bark,
Built in th' eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine. Milton.

Who to a woman trusts his peace of mind,
Trusts a frail bark with a tempestuous wind. Glanv.

To BARK, bârk. v. n. [beoncan, Saxon.]

1. To make the noise which a dog makes when he threatens or pursues.

Sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shaksp. Rich. III.

Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears i' th' town? Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

In vain the herdman calls him back again;
The dogs stand off afar, and bark in vain. Cowley.

2. To clamour at; to pursue with reproaches.

Vile is the vengeance on the ashes cold,
And envy base, to bark at sleeping fame. Fairy Q.

You dare patronage
The envious barking of your saucy tongue
Against my lord! Shaksp.

To BARK, bârk. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip trees of their bark.

The severest penalties ought to be put upon barking any tree that is not felled. Temple.

These trees, after they are barked, and cut into shape, are tumbled down from the mountains into the stream. Addison.

BARK-BARED, bârk'-bâr'd. adj. [from bark and bare.] Stripped of the bark.

Excorticated and bark-bared trees may be preserved by nourishing up a shoot from the foot, or below the stripped place, cutting the body of the tree sloping off a little above the shoot, and it will heal, and be covered with bark. Mortimer.

BA'RKER, bâr'kûr.[98] n. s. [from bark.]

1. One that barks or clamours.

What hath he done more than a base cur? barked and made a noise? had a fool or two to spit in his mouth? But they are rather enemies of my fame than me, these barkers. Ben Jonson.

2. [from bark of trees.] One that is employed in stripping trees.

BA'RKY, bâr'kê. adj. [from bark.] Consisting of bark; containing bark.

Ivy so enrings the barky fingers of the elm. Shaksp.

BA'RLEY, bâr'lê.[270] n. s. [derived by Junius from בר hordeum.]

It hath a thick spike; the calyx, husk, awn, and flower, are like those of wheat or rye, but the awns are rough; the seed is swelling in the middle, and for the most part, ends in a sharp point, to which the husks are closely united. The species are, 1. Common long-eared barley. 2. Winter or square barley, by some called big. 3. Sprat barley, or battledoor barley. All these sorts of barley are sown in the spring of the year, in a dry time. In some very dry light land, the barley is sown early in March; but in strong clayey soils it is not sown till April. The square barley, or big, is chiefly cultivated in the north of England, and in Scotland; and is hardier than the other sorts. Miller.

Barley is emollient, moistening, and expectorating; barley was chosen by Hippocrates as a proper food in inflammatory distempers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

BA'RLEYBRAKE, bâr'lê-brâke. n. s. A kind of rural play.

By neighbours prais'd she went abroad thereby,
At barleybrake her sweet swift feet to try. Sidney.

BA'RLEY BROTH, bâr'lê-brôth. n. s. [from barley and broth.] A low word sometimes used for strong beer.

Can sodden water,
A drench for surreyn'd jades, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?
Shakspeare.

BA'RLEY CORN, bâr'lê-kôrn. n. s. [from barley and corn.] A grain of barley; the beginning of our measure of length; the third part of an inch.

A long, long journey, choak'd with brakes and thorns,
Ill-measured by ten thousand barley corns. Tickell.

BA'RLEY MOW, bâr'lê-môû.[323] n. s. [from barley and mow.] The place where reaped barley is stowed up.

Whenever by yon barley mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay.

BARM, bârm. n. s. [burm, Welsh; beorm, Sax.] Yeast; the ferment put into drink to make it work; and into bread, to lighten and swell it.

Are you not he
That sometimes make the drink bear no barm,
Mislead night wand'rers, laughing at their harm?
Shakspeare.

Try the force of imagination upon staying the working of beer, when the barm is put into it. Bacon.

BA'RMY, bâr'mê. adj. [from barm.] Containing barm; yeasty.

Their jovial nights in frolicks and in play
They pass, to drive the tedious hours away;
And their cold stomachs with crown'd goblets cheer
Of windy cider, and of barmy beer. Dryden.

BARN, bârn. n. s. [bern, Sax.] A place or house for laying up any sort of grain, hay, or straw.

In vain the barns expect their promis'd load;
Nor barns at home, nor reeks are heap'd abroad. Dryden.

I took notice of the make of barns here: having laid a frame of wood, they place at the four corners, four blocks, in such a shape, as neither mice nor vermin can creep up. Addison.

BA'RNACLE, bâr'nâ-kl.[405] n. s. [probably of bern, Sax. a child, and aac, Sax. an oak.]

1. A kind of shell fish that grow upon timber that lies in the sea.

2. A bird like a goose, fabulously supposed to grow on trees.

It is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence, to affirm that the first men might grow upon trees, as the story goes about barnacles; or might be the lice of some vast prodigious animals, whose species is now extinct. Bentley.

And from the most refin'd of saints
As naturally grow miscreants,
As barnacles turn Soland geese
In th' islands of the Orcades. Hudibras.

3. An instrument made commonly of iron for the use of farriers, to hold a horse by the nose, to hinder him from struggling when an incision is made. Farrier's Dict.

BARO'METER, bâ-rôm'mê-tûr.[518] n. s. [from βάρος weight, and μέτρον measure.] A machine for measuring the weight of the atmosphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroscope, which only shews that the air is heavier at one time than another, without specifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, so called from Torricelli, the inventor of it, at Florence, in 1643. It is a glass tube filled with mercury, hermetically sealed at one end; the other open, and immerged in a basin of stagnant mercury: so that, as the weight of the atmosphere diminishes, the mercury in the tube will descend, and, as it increases, the mercury will ascend; the column of mercury suspended in the tube being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmosphere.

The measuring the heights of mountains, and finding the elevation of places above the level of the sea, hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that essential property of the air, its gravity or pressure. As the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoised by a column of air of equal weight, so whatever causes make the air heavier or lighter, the pressure of it will be thereby increased or lessened, and of consequence the mercury will rise or fall. Harris

Gravity is another property of air, whereby it counterpoises a column of mercury from twenty-seven inches and one-half to thirty and one-half, the gravity of the atmosphere varying one-tenth, which are its utmost limits; so that the exact specifick gravity of the air can be determined when the barometer stands at thirty inches, with a moderate heat of the weather. Arbuthnot on Air.

BAROME'TRICAL, bâr-ô-mêt'trê-kâl.[509] [515] adj. [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.

He is very accurate in making barometrical and thermometrical instruments.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

BA'RON, bâr'rûn.[166] n. s. [The etymology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, signified a brave warrior, or a brutal man; and, from the first of these significations, Menage derives baron, as a term of military dignity. Others suppose it originally to signify only a man, in which sense baron, or varon, is still used by the Spaniards; and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uses baron and femme, husband and wife. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gaulish word, signifying commander; others from the Hebrew גבר, of the same import. Some think it a contraction of par homme or peer, which seems least probable.]

1. A degree of nobility next to a viscount. It may be probably thought, that anciently, in England, all those were called barons, that had such signiories as we now call court barons: and it is said, that after the Conquest, all such came to the parliament, and sat as nobles in the upper house. But when, by experience, it appeared that the parliament was too much crowded with such multitudes, it became a custom, that none should come but such as the king, for their extraordinary wisdom or quality, thought good to call by writ; which writ ran hac vice tantum. After that, men seeing that this state of nobility was but casual, and depending merely on the prince's pleasure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male; and these were called barons by letters patent, or by creation, whose posterity are now those barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create more at his pleasure. It is nevertheless thought, that there are yet barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, and that they may be discerned by their titles; the barons by writ being those that, to the title of lord, have their own surnames annexed; whereas the barons, by letters patent, are named by their baronies. These barons, which were first by writ, may now justly also be called barons by prescription; for that they have continued barons, in themselves and their ancestors, beyond the memory of man. There are also barons by tenure, as the bishops of the land, who, by virtue of the baronies annexed to their bishopricks, have always had place in the upper house of parliament, and are called lords spiritual.
2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king: of these the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his assistants, between the king and his subjects, in causes of justice belonging to the exchequer.
3. There are also barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the seven towns, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rye, Rumney, Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower house of parliament. Cowell.

They that bear
The cloth of state above, are four barons
Of the cinque ports. Shakspeare.

4. Baron is used for the husband in relation to his wife. Cowell.
5. A Baron of Beef is when the two sirloins are not cut asunder, but joined together by the end of the backbone. Dict.

BA'RONAGE, bâr'rûn-âdje.[90] n. s. [from baron.]

1. The body of barons and peers.

His charters of the liberties of England, and of the forest, were hardly, and with difficulty, gained by his baronage at Staines, A. D. 1215. Hale.

2. The dignity of a baron.
3. The land which gives title to a baron.

BA'RONESS, bâr'rûn-ês.[557] n. s. [baronessa, Ital. baronissa, Lat.] A baron's lady.

BA'RONET, bâr'rûn-êt.[557] n. s. [of baron and et, diminutive termination.] The lowest degree of honour that is hereditary: it is below a baron and above a knight; and has the precedency of all other knights, except the knights of the garter. It was first founded by king James I. A. D. 1611. Cowell. But it appears by the following passage, that the term was in use before, though in another sense.

King Edward III. being bearded and crossed by the clergy, was advised to direct out his writs to certain gentlemen of the best abilities, entitling them therein barons in the next parliament. By which means he had so many barons in his parliament, as were able to weigh down the clergy; which barons were not afterwards lords, but baronets, as sundry of them do yet retain the name. Spenser.

BA'RONY, bâr'rûn-ê.[557] n. s. [baronnie, Fr. beoɲny, Sax.] That honour or lordship that gives title to a baron. Such are not only the fees of temporal barons, but of bishops also. Cowell.

BA'ROSCOPE, bâr'rô-skôpe. n. s. [βάρος and σκοπέω.] An instrument to shew the weight of the atmosphere. See BAROMETER.

If there was always a calm, the equilibrium could only be changed by the contents; where the winds are not variable, the alterations of the baroscope are very small. Arbuthnot.

BA'RRACAN, bâr'râ-kân. n. s. [bouracan, or barracan, Fr.] A strong thick kind of camelot.

BA'RRACK, bâr'râk. n. s. [barracca, Span.]

1. Little cabins made by the Spanish fishermen on the sea shore; or little lodges for soldiers in a camp.
2. It is generally taken among us for buildings to lodge soldiers.

BA'RRATOR, bâr'râ-tûr. n. s. [from barat, old Fr. from which is still retained barateur a cheat.] A wrangler, and encourager of law-suits.

Will it not reflect as much on thy character, Nic, to turn barrator in thy old days, a stirrer-up of quarrels amongst thy neighbours?

Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

BA'RRATRY, bâr'râ-trê. n. s. [from barrater.] The practice or crime of a barrator; foul practice in law.

'Tis arrant barratry, that bears
Point blank an action 'gainst our laws. Hudibras.

BA'RREL, bâr'rîl.[99] n. s. [baril, Welsh.]

1. A round wooden vessel to be stopped close.

It hath been observed by one of the ancients, that an empty barrel, knocked upon with the finger, giveth a diapason to the sound of the like barrel full. Bacon.

Trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fears to broach. Dryden.

2. A particular measure in liquids. A barrel of wine is thirty-one gallons and a half; of ale, thirty-two gallons; of beer, thirty-six gallons; and of beer-vinegar, thirty-four gallons.
3. [In dry measure.] A barrel of Essex butter contains one hundred and six pounds; of Suffolk butter, two hundred and fifty-six. A barrel of herrings should contain thirty-two gallons wine measure, holding usually a thousand herrings.

Several colleges, instead of limiting their rents to a certain sum, prevailed with their tenants to pay the price of so many barrels of corn, as the market went. Swift.

4. Any thing hollow; as the barrel of a gun, that part which holds the shot.

Take the barrel of a long gun perfectly bored, set it upright with the breech upon the ground, and take a bullet exactly fit for it; then, if you suck at the mouth of the barrel ever so gently, the bullet will come up so forcibly, that it will hazard the striking out your teeth. Digby.

5. A cylinder; frequently that cylinder about which any thing is wound.

Your string and bow must be accommodated to your drill; if too weak, it will not carry about the barrel. Moxon.

6. Barrel of the ear, is a cavity behind the tympanum, covered with a fine membrane. Dict.

To BA'RREL, bâr'rîl. v. a. [from the noun.] To put any thing in a barrel for preservation.

I would have their beef beforehand barrelled, which may be used as is needed. Spenser on Irel.

Barrel up earth, and sow some seed in it, and put it in the bottom of a pond. Bacon.

BA'RREL-BELLIED, bâr'rîl-bêl-lîd. adj. [from barrel and belly.] Having a large belly.

Dauntless at empty noises; lofty-neck'd,
Sharp-headed, barrel-belly'd, broadly back'd. Dryden.

BA'RREN, bâr'rên. adj. [bane, Sax. naked; properly applied to trees or ground unfruitful.]

1. Without the quality of producing its kind; not prolific: applied to animals.

They hail'd him father to a line of kings,
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
No son of mine succeeding. Shaksp.

There shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle. Deut.

2. Unfruitful; not fertile; sterile.

The situation of this city is pleasant, but the water is naught, and the ground barren. 2 Kings.

Telemachus is far from exalting the nature of his country; he confesses it to be barren. Pope.

3. Not copious; scanty.

Some schemes will appear barren of hints and matter, but prove to be fruitful. Swift.

4. Unmeaning; uninventive; dull.

There be of them that will make themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too. Shaksp.

BA'RRENLY, bâr'rên-lè. adv. [from barren.] Unfruitfully.

BA'RRENNESS, bâr'rên-nês. n. s. [from barren.]

1. Want of offspring; want of the power of procreation.

I pray'd for children, and thought barrenness
In wedlock a reproach. Milton.

No more be mention'd then of violence
Against ourselves; and wilful barrenness,
That cuts us off from hope. Milton.

2. Unfruitfulness; sterility; infertility.

Within the self-same hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value, through the diversity of their fertility or barrenness. Bacon.

3. Want of invention; want of the power of producing any thing new.

The adventures of Ulysses are imitated in the Æneis; though the accidents are not the same, which would have argued him of a total barrenness of invention. Dryden.

4. Want of matter; scantiness.

The importunity of our adversaries hath constrained us longer to dwell than the barrenness of so poor a cause could have seemed either to require or to admit. Hooker.

5. [In theology.] Aridity; want of emotion or sensibility.

The greatest saints sometimes are fervent, and sometimes feel a barrenness of devotion. Taylor.

BA'RREN WORT, bâr'rên-wûrt. n. s. [epimedium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BA'RRFUL, bâr'fûll. adj. [from bar and full.] Full of obstructions.

A barrfull strife!
Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. Shaksp.

BARRICA'DE, bâ-rè-kâde'. n. s. [barricade, Fr.]

1. A fortification, made in haste, of trees, earth, wagons, or any thing else, to keep off an attack.

2. Any stop; bar; obstruction.

There must be such a barricade, as would greatly annoy, or absolutely stop, the currents of the atmosphere. Derham.

To BARRICA'DE, bâr-rè-kâde'. v. a. [barricader, Fr.]

1. To stop up a passage.

Now all the pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mixt hurry barricades the street;
Entangled here, the waggon's lengthen'd team. Gay.

2. To hinder by stoppage.

A new volcano continually discharging that matter, which being till then barricaded up and imprisoned in the bowels of the earth, was the occasion of very great and frequent calamities. Woodward.

BARRICA'DO, bâr-rè-kâ'dò. n. s. [barricada, Span.] A fortification; a bar; any thing fixed to hinder entrance.

The access was by a neck of land, between the sea on one part, and the harbour water, or inner sea on the other; fortified clean over with a strong rampier and barricado. Bacon.

To BARRICA'DO, bâr-rè-kâ'dò. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to bar; to stop up.

Fast we found, fast shut
The dismal gates, and barricado'd strong! Milton.

He had not time to barricado the doors; so that the enemy entered. Clarendon.

The truth of causes we find so obliterated, that it seems almost barricadoed from any intellectual approach. Harvey.

BA'RRIER, bâr'rè-ûr.[98] n. s. [barriere, Fr. It is sometimes pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, but it is placed more properly on the first.]

1. A barricade; an entrenchment.

Safe in the love of heav'n, an ocean flows
Around our realm, a barrier from the foes. Pope.

2. A fortification, or strong place, as on the frontiers of a country.

The queen is guarantee of the Dutch, having possession of the barrier, and the revenues thereof, before a peace. Swift.

3. A stop; an obstruction.

If you value yourself as a man of learning, you are building a most impassable barrier against improvement. Watts.

4. A bar to mark the limits of any place.

For justs, and tourneys, and barriers, the glories of them are chiefly in the chariots, wherein the challengers make their entries. Bacon.

Pris'ners to the pillar bound,
At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,
Be freed, or arm'd anew. Dryden.

5. A boundary; a limit.

But wave whate'er to Cadmus may belong,
And fix, O muse, the barrier of thy song
At Oedipus. Pope's Statius.

How instinct varies in the grovelling swine,
Compar'd, half reas'ning elephant! with thine:
'Twixt that and reason what a nice barrier!
For ever sep'rate, yet for ever near. Pope.

BA'RRISTER, bâr'rìs-tûr. n. s. [from bar.] A person qualified to plead causes, called an advocate or licentiate in other countries and courts. Outer barristers are pleaders without the bar, to distinguish them from inner barristers; such are the benchers, or those who have been readers, the counsel of the king, queen, or princes, who are admitted to plead within the bar. A counsellor at law. Blount. Chamb.

BA'RROW, bâr'rôw. n. s. [beɒeɒe, Sax. supposed by Skinner to come from bear.] Any kind of carriage moved by the hand; as, a hand-barrow, a frame of boards, with handles at each end, carried between two men; a wheel-barrow, that which one man pushes forward by raising it upon one wheel.

Have I lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and thrown into the Thames. Shaksp.

No barrow's wheel
Shall mark thy stocking with a miry trace. Gay.

BA'RROW, bâr'rôw. n. s. [beɒȝ, Sax.] A hog: whence barrow grease, or hog's lard.

BARROW, whether in the beginning or end of names of places, signifies a grove; from beaɒe, which the Saxons used in the same sense. Gibson.

BARROW, is likewise used in Cornwall for a hillock, under which, in old times, bodies have been buried.

To BA'RTER, bâr'tûr.[98] v. n. [baratter, Fr. to trick in traffick; from barat craft, fraud.] To traffick by exchanging one commodity for another, in opposition to purchasing with money.

As if they scorn'd to trade and barter,
By giving or by taking quarter. Hudibras.

A man has not every thing growing upon his soil, and therefore is willing to barter with his neighbour. Collier.

To BA'RTER, bâr'tûr. v. a.

1. To give any thing in exchange for something else.

For him was I exchang'd and ransom'd;
But with a baser man of arms by far
Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me. Shakspeare.

Then as thou wilt dispose the rest,
To those who, at the market rate,
Can barter honour for estate. Prior.

I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods, like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.

2. Sometimes it is used with the particle away before the thing given.

If they will barter away their time, methinks they should at least have some ease in exchange. Decay of Piety.

He also bartered away plums, that would have rotted in a week, for nuts that would last good for his eating a whole year. Locke.

BA'RTER, bâr'tûr. n. s. [from the verb.] The act or practice of trafficking by exchange of commodities; sometimes the thing given in exchange.

From England they may be furnished with such things as they may want, and, in exchange or barter, send other things with which they may abound. Bacon.

He who corrupteth English with foreign words is as wise as ladies that change plate for china; for which the laudable traffick of old clothes is much the fairest barter. Felton.

BA'RTERER, bâr'tûr-ûr. n. s. [from barter.] He that trafficks by exchange of commodities.

BA'RTERY, bâr'tûr-rè.[555] n. s. [from barter.] Exchange of commodities.

It is a received opinion, that, in most ancient ages, there was only bartery or exchange of commodities amongst most nations. Camden's Rem.

BA'RTON, bâr'tûn.[155] n. s. The demesne lands of a manour; the manour-house itself; and sometimes the out-houses. Blount.

BA'RTRAM, bâr'trâm. n. s. A plant; the same with pellitory.

BASE, bâse. adj. [bas, Fr. basso, Ital. baxo, Span. bassus, low Latin; βαθις.]

1. Mean; vile; worthless: of things.

The harvest white plumb is a base plumb, and the white date plumbs are no very good plumbs. Bacon.

Pyreicus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things, as earthen pitchers, a scullery; whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus. Peacham.

2. Of mean spirit; disingenuous; illiberal; ungenerous; low; without dignity of sentiment: of persons.

Since the perfections are such in the party I love, as the feeling of them cannot come unto any unnoble heart; shall that heart, lifted up to such a height, be counted base? Sidney.

It is base in his adversaries thus to dwell upon the excesses of a passion. Atterbury.

3. Of low station; of mean account; without dignity of rank; without honour.

If the lords and chief men degenerate, what shall be hoped of the peasants and baser people. Spenser.

If that rebellion
Came, like itself, in base and abject routs,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here. Shakspeare.

It could not else be, I should prove so base
To sue and be denied such common grace. Shaksp.

And I will yet be more vile than this, and will be base in mine own sight. 2 Sam.

Insurrections of base people are commonly more furious in their beginnings. Bacon.

He, whose mind
Is virtuous, is alone of noble kind;
Though poor in fortune, of celestial race;
And he commits the crime who calls him base.
Dryden.

4. Base-born; born out of wedlock, and by consequence, of no honourable birth; illegitimate.

Why bastard? wherefore base?
When my dimensions are as well compact
As honest madam's issue. Shakspeare.

This young lord lost his life with his father in the field, and with them a base son. Camden's Rem.

5. Applied to metals, without value. It is used in this sense of all metal except gold and silver.

A guinea is pure gold, if it has nothing but gold in it, without any alloy or baser metal. Watts.

6. Applied to sounds; deep, grave. It is more frequently written bass, though the comparative baser seems to require base.

In pipes, the lower the note holes be, and the further from the mouth of the pipe, the more base sound they yield. Bacon.

BASE-BORN, bāse'bŏrn. adj. Born out of wedlock.

But see thy base-born child, thy babe of shame,
Who, left by thee, upon our parish came. Gay.

BASE-COURT, bāse'kŏrt. n. s. [bas cour, Fr.] Lower court; not the chief court that leads to the house; the back-yard; the farm-yard.

My lord, in the base-court he doth attend,
To speak with you. Shakspeare.

BASE-MINDED, bāse-mīnd'ĕd. adj. Mean-spirited; worthless.

It signifieth, as it seemeth, no more than abject, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Camden's Rem.

BASE-VIOL, bāse-vī'ŭl.[166] n. s. [usually written bass-viol.] An instrument which is used in concerts for the base sound.

At the first grin he cast every human feature out of his countenance; at the second, he became the head of a base-viol. Addison.

BASE, bāse. n. s. [bas, Fr. basis, Lat.]

1. The bottom of any thing: commonly used for the lower part of a building, or column.

What if it tempt thee tow'rd the flood, my lord?
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles o'er his base into the sea. Shakspeare.

Firm Dorick pillars found your solid base;
The fair Corinthian crowns the higher space. Dryd.

And all below is strength, and all above is grace,
Columns of polish'd marble, firmly set
On golden bases, are his legs and feet. Prior.

2. The pedestal of a statue.

Men of weak abilities in great places, are like little statues set on great bases, made the less by their advancement. Bacon.

Mercury was patron of flocks, and the ancients placed a ram at the base of his images. Broome.

3. That part of any ornament which hangs down, as housings.

Phalastus was all in white, having his bases and caparison embroidered. Sidney.

4. The broad part of any body; as, the bottom of a cone.

5. Stockings, or perhaps the armour for the legs. [from bas, Fr.]

Nor shall it e'er be said that wight,
With gauntlet blue and bases white,
And round blunt truncheon by his side,
So great a man at arms defy'd. Hudibras.

6. The place from which racers or tilters run; the bottom of the field; the carcer, the starting-post.

He said; to their appointed base they went;
With beating heart th' expecting sign receive,
And, starting all at once, the barrier leave. Dryden.

7. The string that gives a base sound.

At thy well-sharpen'd thumb, from shore to shore,
The trebles queak for fear, the bases roar. Dryden.

8. An old rustick play, written by Skinner bays, and in some counties called prison bars.

He with two striplings (lads more like to run
The country base, than to commit such slaughter)
Made good the passage. Shakspeare.

To BASE, bāse. v. a. [basier, Fr.] To embase; to make less valuable by admixture of meaner metals.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals, which we cannot base: as, whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height. Bacon.

BA'SELY, bāse'lē. adv. [from base.]

1. In a base manner; meanly; dishonourably.

The king is not himself, but basely led
By flatterers. Shakspeare.

A lieutenant basely gave it up, as soon as Essex in his passage demanded it. Clarendon.

With broken vows his fame he will not stain,
With conquest basely bought, and with inglorious gain. Dryden.

2. In bastardy.

These two Mitylene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Knolles.

BA'SENESS, bāse'nĕs. n. s. [from base.]

1. Meanness; vileness; badness.

Such is the power of that sweet passion,
That it all sordid baseness doth expel. Spenser.

Your soul's above the baseness of distrust:
Nothing but love could make you so unjust. Dryd.

When a man's folly must be spread open before the angels, and all his baseness ript up before those pure spirits, this will be a double hell. South.

2. Vileness of metal.

We alleged the fraudulent obtaining his patent, the baseness of his metal, and the prodigious sum to be coined. Swift.

3. Bastardy; illegitimacy of birth.

Why brand they us
With base? with baseness? bastardy? Shakspeare.

4. Deepness of sound.

The just and measured proportion of the air percussed towards the baseness or trebleness of tones, is one of the greatest secrets in the contemplation of sounds. Bacon.

To BASH, bāsh. v. n. [probably from base.] To be ashamed; to be confounded with shame.

His countenance was bold, and bashed not
For Guyon's looks, but scornful eye-glance at him shot. Spenser.

BASHA'W, bāsh-ăw'. n. s. [sometimes written bassa.] A title of honour and command among the Turks; the viceroy of a province; the general of an army.

The Turks made an expedition into Persia; and, because of the straits of the mountains, the bashaw consulted which way they should get in. Bacon.

BA'SHFUL, bāsh'fŭl. adj. [This word, with all those of the same race, are of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines them derived from base or mean; Minsnew, from verbaesen, Dut. to strike with astonishment; Junius, from βάσις, which he finds in Hesychius to signify shame. The conjecture of Minshew seems most probable.]

1. Modest; shamefaced.

I never tempted her with word too large;
But, as a brother to his sister, show'd
Bashful sincerity and comely love. Shakspeare.

2. Sheepish; vitiously modest.

He looked with an almost bashful kind of modesty, as if he feared the eyes of man. Sidney.

Hence, bashful cunning!
And prompt me, plain and holy innocence. Shaksp.

Our author, anxious for his fame to-night,
And bashful in his first attempt to write,
Lies cautiously obscure. Addison.

BA'SHFULLY, bāsh'fŭl-lē. adv. [from bashful.] Timorously; modestly.

BA'SHFULNESS, bāsh'fŭl-nĕs. n. s. [from bashful.]

1. Modesty, as shown in outward appearance.

Philoclea a little mused how to cut the thread even, with eyes, cheeks, and lips, whereof each sang their part, to make up the harmony of bashfulness. Sidney.

Such looks, such bashfulness, might well adorn
The cheeks of youths that are more nobly born. Dryden.

2. Vitious or rustick shame.

For fear had bequeathed his room to his kinsman bashfulness, to teach him good manners. Sidney.

There are others who have not altogether so much of this foolish bashfulness, and who ask every one's opinion. Dryden.

BA'SIL, bāz'ĭl n. s. [ocymum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BA'SIL, bāz'ĭl. n. s. The angle to which the edge of a joiner's tool is ground away. See To BASIL.

BA'SIL, bāz'ĭl. n. s. The skin of a sheep tanned. This is, I believe, more properly written basen.

To BA'SIL, bāz'ĭl. v. a. To grind the edge of a tool to an angle.

These chissels are not ground to such a basil as the joiners' chissels, on one of the sides, but are basiled away on both the flat sides; so that the edge lies between both the sides in the middle of the tool. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

BASI'LICA, bā-zĭl'ē-kā. n. s. [βασιλικὸν.] The middle vein of the arm, so called by way of pre-eminence. It is likewise attributed to many medicines for the same reason. Quincy.

BASI'LICAL, bā-zĭl'ē-kāl. } adj. [from basi-
BASI'LICK, bā-zĭl'ĭk. } lica. See BASILICA.] Belonging to the basilick vein.

These aneurisms following always upon bleeding the basilick vein, must be aneurisms of the humeral artery. Sharp.

BASI'LICK, bā-zĭl'ĭk. n. s. [basilique, Fr. βασιλικὴ.] A large hall, having two ranges of pillars, and two isles or wings, with galleries over them. These basi- licks were first made for the palaces of princes, and afterwards converted into courts of justice, and lastly into churches; whence a basilick is generally taken for a magnificent church, as the basilick of St. Peter at Rome.

BASI'LICON, bâ-zil'ê-kôn, n. s. [βασιλικὸν.] An ointment, called also tetrapharmacon. Quincy.

I made incision into the cavity, and put a pledget of basilicon over it. Wiseman.

BA'SILISK, bâz'ê-lisk. n. s. [basiliscus, Lat. of βασιλισκος, of βασιλευς a king.]

1. A kind of serpent, called also a cockatrice, which is said to drive away all others by his hissing, and to kill by looking.

Make me not sighted like the basilisk;
I've look'd on thousands who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Shakspeare.

The basilisk was a serpent not above three palms long, and differenced from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks or coronary spots upon the crown. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. A species of cannon or ordnance.

We practise to make swifter motions than any you have, and to make them stronger and more violent than yours are; exceeding your greatest cannons and basilisks. Bacon.

BA'SIN, bâ'sn.[405] n. s. [basin, Fr. bacile, bacino, Ital. It is often written bason, but not according to etymology.]

1. A small vessel to hold water for washing, or other uses.

Let one attend him with a silver basin,
Full of rose-water and bestrew'd with flowers. Shak.

We have little wells for infusions, where the waters take the virtue quicker, and better, than in vessels and basins. Bacon.

We behold a piece of silver in a basin, when water is put upon it, which we could not discover before, as under the verge thereof. Brown's Vulg. E.

2. A small pond.

On one side of the walk you see this hollow basin, with its several little plantations lying conveniently under the eye of the beholder. Spectator.

3. A part of the sea inclosed in rocks, with a narrow entrance.

The jutting land two ample bays divides;
The spacious basins arching rocks inclose,
A sure defence from ev'ry storm that blows. Pope.

4. Any hollow place capacious of liquids.

If this rotation does the seas affect,
The rapid motion rather would eject
The stores, the low capacious caves contain,
And from its ample basin cast the main. Blackmore.

5. A dock for repairing and building ships.

6. In anatomy, a round cavity situated between the anterior ventricles of the brain.

7. A concave piece of metal, by which glass-grinders form their convex glasses.

BA'SIS, bâ'sis. n. s. [basis, Lat.]

1. The foundation of any thing, as of a column or a building.

It must follow, that Paradise, being raised to this height, must have the compass of the whole earth for a basis and foundation. Raleigh.

Ascend my chariot, guide the rapid wheels
That shake heav'n's basis. Milton.

In altar wise a stately pile they rear;
The basis broad below, and top advanc'd in air.
Dryden.

2. The lowest of the three principal parts of a column, which are the basis, shaft, and capital.

Observing an English inscription upon the basis, we read it over several times. Addison.

3. That on which any thing is raised.

Such seems thy gentle height, made only proud
To be the basis of that pompous load,
Than which a nobler weight no mountain bears.
Denham.

4. The pedestal.

How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport,
That now on Pompey's basis lies along
No worthier than the dust? Shakspeare.

5. The ground-work or first principle of any thing.

Build me thy fortune upon the basis of valour.
Shakspeare.

The friendships of the world are oft
Confederacies in vice, or leagues of pleasure;
Ours has severest virtue for its basis. Addison.

To BASK, bâsk'.[79] v. a. [backeren, Dutch. Skinner.] To warm by laying out in the heat: used almost always of animals.

And stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
Basks at the fire his hairy strength. Milton.

He was basking himself in the gleam of the sun.
L'Estrange.

'Tis all thy business, business how to shun,
To bask thy naked body in the sun. Dryden.

To BASK, bâsk. v. n. To lie in the warmth.

About him, and above, and round the wood,
The birds that haunt the borders of his flood,
That bath'd within, or bask'd upon his side,
To tuneful songs their narrow throats apply'd. Dryd.

Unlock'd in covers let her freely run
To range thy courts, and bask before the sun.
Tickell.

Some in the fields of purest æther play,
And bask and whiten in the blaze of day. Pope.

BA'SKET, bâs'kît. n. s. [basged, Welsh; bascauda, Lat. Barbara depictis venit bascauda Britannis. Martial.] A vessel made of twigs, rushes, or splinters, or some other slender bodies interwoven.

Here is a basket; he may creep in, and throw foul linen upon him, as if going to bucking. Shakspeare.

Thus while I sung, my sorrows I deceiv'd,
And bending osiers into baskets weav'd. Dryden.

Poor Peg was forced to go hawking and peddling; now and then carrying a basket of fish to the market. Arbuthnot.

BA'SKET-HILT, bâs'kît-hîlt.[99] n. s. [from basket and hilt.] A hilt of a weapon so made as to contain the whole hand, and defend it from being wounded.

His puissant sword unto his side;
Near his undaunted heart was ty'd:
With basket-hilt, that would hold broth,
And serve for fight and dinner both. Hudibras.

Their beef they often in their murrions stew'd,
And in their basket-hilts their bev'rage brew'd. King.

BA'SKET-WOMAN, bâs'kît-wûm-ûn. n. s [from basket and woman.] A woman that plies at markets with a basket, ready to carry home any thing that is bought

BASS, bâs. n. s. [supposed by Junius to be derived, like basket, from some British word signifying a rush; but perhaps more properly written boss, from the French bosse.] A mat used in churches

Having woollen yarn, bass mat, or such like, to bind them withal. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To BASS, bâse. v. n. To sound in a deep tone.

1. To convict of being a bastard.
2. To beget a bastard.

I should have been what I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Shakspeare.

BA'STARDLY, bâs'târd-lè. adv. [from bastard.] In the manner of a bastard; spuriously.

Good seed degenerates, and oft obeys
The soil's disease, and into cockle strays;
Let the mind's thoughts but be transplanted so
Into the body, and bastardly they grow. Donne.

BA'STARDY, bâs'târ-dè. n. s. [from bastard.] An unlawful state of birth, which disables the bastard, both according to the laws of God and man, from succeeding to an inheritance. Ayliffe.

Once she slandered me with bastardy;
But whether I be true begot or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head. Shaksp.

In respect of the evil consequents, the wife's adultery is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family. Taylor.

No more of bastardy in heirs of crowns. Pope.

To BASTE, bâste. v. a. participle pass. basted, or basten. [bastonner, Fr. Bazata, in the Armorick dialect, signifies to strike with a stick; from which perhaps baston a stick, and all its derivatives, or collaterals, may be deduced.]

1. To beat with a stick.

Quoth she, I grant it is in vain
For one that's basted to feel pain;
Because the pangs his bones endure
Contribute nothing to the cure. Hudibras.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a working. Swift.

2. To drip butter, or any thing else, upon meat, as it turns upon the spit.

Sir, I think the meat wants what I have, a basting. Shakspeare.

3. To moisten meat on the spit by melted fat falling upon it.

BA'STION, bâs'tshŭn.[291] n. s. [bastion, Fr.] A huge mass of earth, usually faced with sods, sometimes with brick, rarely with stone, standing out from a rampart, of which it is a principal part, and was anciently called a bulwark. Harris.

Toward: but how? ay there 's the question;
Fierce the assault, unarm'd the bastion. Prior.

BAT, bât. n. s. [bat, Sax. This word seems to have given rise to a great number of words in many languages; as, battre, Fr. to beat; baton, battle, beat, batty, and others. It probably signified a weapon that did execution by its weight, in opposition to a sharp edge; whence whirlbat and brickbat.] A heavy stick or club.

A handsome bat he held,
On which he leaned, as one far in eld. Spenser.

They were fried in arm chairs, and their bones broken with bats. Hakewill.

BAT, bât. n. s. [vespertilio, the etymology unknown.] An animal having the body of a mouse and the wings of a bird; not with feathers, but with a sort of skin which is extended. It lays no eggs, but brings forth its young alive, and suckles them. It never grows tame, feeds upon flies, insects, and fatty substances, such as candles, oil, and cheese; and appears only in the summer evenings, when the weather is fine. Calmet.

When owls do cry,
On the bat's back I do fly. Shakspeare.

But then grew reason dark; that fair star no more
Could the fair forms of good and truth discern;
Bats they became who eagles were before;
And this they got by their desire to learn. Davies.

Some animals are placed in the middle betwixt two kinds, as bats, which have something of birds and beasts. Locke.

Where swallows in the winter season keep,
And how the drowsy bat and dormouse sleep. Gay.

BAT-FOWLING, bât'fôŭ-ling. n. s. [from bat and fowl.] A particular manner of bird-catching in the night-time, while they are at roost upon perches, trees, or hedges. They light torches or straw, and then beat the bushes; upon which the birds flying to the flames, are caught either with nets, or otherwise.

You would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.—We should so, and then go a bat-fowling. Shaksp.

Bodies lighted at night by fire, must have a brighter lustre than by day; as sacking of cities, bat-fowling. Peacham.

BA'TABLE, bâ'tâ-bl.[405] adj. [from bate.] Disputable.

Batable ground seems to be the ground heretofore in question, whether it belonged to England or Scotland, lying between both kingdoms. Cowell.

BATCH, bâtsh. n. s. [from bake.]

1. The quantity of bread baked at a time.

The joiner puts the boards into ovens after the batch is drawn, or lays them in a warm stable. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Any quantity of any thing made at once, so as to have the same qualities

Except he were of the same meal and batch. Ben Jonson.

BA'TCHELOR, bâtsh'è-lôr. See BACHELOR.

BATE, bâte. n. s. [perhaps contracted from d bate.] Strife; contention; as, a make bate.

To BATE, bâte. v. a. [contracted from abate.]

1. To lessen any thing; to retrench.

Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key,
With bated breath, and whisp'ring humbleness,
Say this? Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

Nor, envious at the sight, will I forbear
My plenteous bowl, nor bate my plenteous cheer. Dryden.

2. To sink the price.

When the landholder's rent falls, he must either bate the labourer's wages, or not employ, or not pay him. Locke.

3. To lessen a demand.

Bate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely. Shaksp. Henry IV.

4. To cut off; to take away.

Bate but the last, and 'tis what I would say. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

To BATE, bâte. v. n.

1. To grow less.

Bardolph, am not I fallen away vilely since this last election? Do I not bate? Do I not dwindle? Why my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

2. To remit: with of before the thing

Abate thy speed, and I will bate of mine. Dryden.

BATE, bâte, seems to have been once the preterite of bite, as Shakspeare uses biting faulchion; unless, in the following lines, it may be rather deduced from beat.

Yet there the steel staid not, but inly bate
Deep in his flesh, and open'd wide a red flood gate. Spenser.

BA'TEFUL, bâte'fûl. adj. [from bate and full.] Contentious.

He knew her haunt, and haunted in the same,
And taught his sheep her sheep in food to thwart;
Which soon as it did bateful question frame,
He might on knees confess his guilty part. Sidney.

BA'TEMENT, bâte'mênt. n. s. [from abatement.] Diminution: a term only used among artificers.

To abate, is to waste a piece of stuff; instead of asking how much was cut off, carpenters ask what batement that piece of stuff had. Moxon.

BATH, bâth.[78] n. s. [baŏ, Saxon.]

1. A bath is either hot or cold, either of art or nature. Artificial baths have been in great esteem with the ancients, especially in complaints to be relieved by revulsion, as inveterate headaches, by opening the pores of the feet, and also in cutaneous cases. But the modern practice has greatest recourse to the natural baths; most of which abound with a mineral sulphur, as appears from their turning silver and copper blackish. The cold baths are the most convenient springs, or reservatories, of cold water to wash in, which the ancients had in great esteem; and the present age can produce abundance of noble cures performed by them. Quincy.

Why may not the cold bath, into which they plunged themselves, have had some share in their cure? Addison's Spectator.

2. A state in which great outward heat is applied to the body, for the mitigation of pain, or any other purpose.

In the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames! Shakspeare.

Sleep
The birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

3. In chymistry, it generally signifies a vessel of water, in which another is placed that requires a softer heat than the naked fire. Balneum Mariæ is a mistake for balneum maris, a sea or water bath. A sand heat is sometimes called balneum siccum, or cinereum. Quincy.

We see that the water of things distilled in water, which they call the bath, differeth not much from the water of things distilled by fire. Bacon.

4. A sort of Hebrew measure, containing the tenth part of an homer, or seven gallons and four pints, as a measure for things liquid; and three pecks and three pints, as a measure for things dry. Calmet.

Ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah. Isaiah.

To BATHE, bā*the*.[467] v. a. [baðian, Saxon.]

1. To wash, as in a bath.

Others on silver lakes and rivers bath'd
Their downy breast. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Chancing to bathe himself in the river Cydnus, through the excessive coldness of these waters, he fell sick, near unto death, for three days. South.

2. To supple or soften by the outward application of warm liquors.

Bathe them, and keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters and lenitive boluses. Wiseman's Surgery.

I'll bathe your wounds in tears for my offence. Dryden.

3. To wash any thing.

Phœnician Dido stood,
Fresh from her wound, her bosom bath'd in blood. Dryden.

Mars could in mutual blood the centaurs bathe,
And Jove himself give way to Cinthia's wrath. Dryd.

To BATHE, bā*the*. v. n. To be in the water, or in any resemblance of a bath.

Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
I cannot tell. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

The delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick ribbed ice. Shakspeare.

The gallants dancing by the river side,
They bathe in summer, and in winter slide. Waller.

But bathe, and, in imperial robes array'd,
Pay due devotions. Pope's Odyssey.

BA'TING, or ABA'TING, bā'ting, or ā-bā'ting.[410] prep. [from bate, or abate. This word, though a participle in itself, seems often used as a preposition.] Except.

The king, your brother, could not choose an advocate,
Whom I would sooner hear on any subject,
Bating that only one, his love, than you. Rowe.

If we consider children, we have little reason to think that they bring many ideas with them, bating, perhaps, some faint ideas of hunger and thirst. Locke.

BA'TLET, bāt'lĕt. n. s. [from bat.] A square piece of wood, with a handle, used in beating linen when taken out of the buck.

I remember the kissing of her batlet, and the cow's dugs that her pretty chopt hands had milked. Shaksp.

BATO'ON, bā-tōōn'. n. s. [baston, or bâton, Fr. formerly spelt baston.]

1. A staff or club.

We came close to the shore, and offered to land; but straightways we saw divers of the people with bastons in their hands, as it were; forbidding us to land. Bacon's New Atalantis.

That does not make a man the worse,
Although his shoulders with batoon
Be claw'd and cudgell'd to some tune. Hudibras.

2. A truncheon or marshal's staff; a badge of military honour.

BA'TTAILOUS, bāt'tā-lŭs. adj. [from battaille, Fr.] Having the appearance of a battle; warlike; with a military appearance.

He started up, and did himself prepare
In sun-bright arms and battailous array. Fairfax.

The French came foremost, battailous and bold. Fairfax.

A fiery region, stretch'd
In battailous aspect, and nearer view
Bristled with upright beams innumerable
Of rigid spears and helmets throng'd. Milton.

BATTA'LIA, bāt-tāl'yā.[272] n. s. [battaglia, Ital.]

1. The order of battle.

Next morning the king put his army into battalia. Clarendon.

2. The main body of an army in array, distinguished from the wings.

BATTA'LION, bāt-tāl'yŭn.[272 507] n. s. [battallon, Fr.]

1. A division of an army; a troop; a body of forces. It is now confined to the infantry, and the number is uncertain, but generally from five to eight hundred men. Some regiments consist of one battalion, and others are divided into two, three, or more.

When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

In this battalion there were two officers, called Thersites and Pandarus. Tatler.

The pierc'd battalions disunited fall
In heaps on heaps: one fate o'erwhelms them all. Pope.

2. An army. This sense is not now in use.

Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.
—Why, our battalion trebles that account. Shaksp.

To BA'TTEN, bāt'tn.[103] v. a. [a word of doubtful etymology.]

1. To fatten, or make fat; to feed plenteously.

We drove afield,
Batt'ning our flocks with the fresh dews of night. Milton.

2. To fertilize.

The meadows here, with batt'ning ooze enrich'd,
Give spirit to the grass; three cubits high
The jointed herbage shoots. Philips.

To BA'TTEN, bāt'tn.[103] v. n. To grow fat; to live in indulgence.

Follow your function, go and batten on cold bits. Shakspeare.

Burnish'd and batt'ning on their food, to show
The diligence of careful herds below. Dryden.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and batten on his sleep. Dryden.

As at full length the pamper'd monarch lay,
Batt'ning in ease, and slumb'ring life away. Garth.

Tway mice, full blythe and amicable,
Batten beside erle Robert's table. Prior.

While paddling ducks the standing lake desire,
Or batt'ning hogs roll in the sinking mire. Gay.

BA'TTEN, bāt'tn.[103] n. s. A word used only by workmen.

A batten is a scantling of wood, two, three, or four inches broad, seldom above one thick, and the length unlimited. Moxon.

To BA'TTER, bāt'tŭr.[98] v. a. [battre, to beat, Fr.]

1. To beat; to beat down; to shatter: frequently used of walls thrown down by artillery, or of the violence of engines of war.

To appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort. Ezekiel.

These haughty words of hers
Have batter'd me like roaring cannon shot,
And made me almost yield upon my knees. Shaksp.

Britannia there, the fort in vain
Had batter'd been with golden rain:
Thunder itself had fail'd to pass. Waller.

Be then the naval stores the nation's care,
New ships to build, and batter'd to repair. Dryden.

2. To wear with beating.

Crowds to the castle mounted up the street,
Batt'ring the pavement with their coursers' feet. Dryden.

If you have a silver saucepan for the kitchen use, let me advise you to batter it well; this will shew constant good housekeeping. Swift.

3. Applied to persons, to wear out with service.

The batter'd veteran strumpets here
Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southern.

I am a poor old battered fellow, and I would willingly end my days in peace. Arbuthnot.

As the same dame, experienc'd in her trade,
By names of toasts retails each batter'd jade. Pope.

To BA'TTER, bāt'tŭr.[98] v. n. A word used only by workmen.

The side of a wall, or any timber, that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter. Moxon.

BA'TTER, bāt'tŭr. n. s. [from To batter.] A mixture of several ingredients beaten together with some liquor; so called from its being so much beaten.

One would have all things little, hence has try'd
Turkey poults fresh from th' egg in batter fry'd. King.

BA'TTERER, bāt'tŭr-rŭr. n. s. [from batter.] He that batters.

BA'TTERY, bāt'tŭr-rē.[555] n. s. [from batter, or batterie, Fr.]

1. The act of battering.

Strong wars they make, and cruel battery bend,
'Gainst fort of reason, it to overthrow. Fairy Queen.

Earthly minds, like mud walls, resist the strongest batteries. Locke.

2. The instruments with which a town is battered, placed in order for action; a line of cannon.

Where is best place to make our batt'ry next?—
—I think at the north gate. Shaksp. Henry VI.

It plants this reasoning and that argument, this consequence and that distinction, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way and passage into the obstinate inclosed truth. South.

See, and revere th' artillery of heav'n,
Drawn by the gale, or by the tempest driven:
A dreadful fire the floating batt'ries make,
O'erturn the mountain, and the forest shake. Blackmore.

3. The frame, or raised work, upon which cannons are mounted.

4. [In law.] A violent striking of any man. In an action against a striker, one may be found guilty of the assault, yet acquitted of the battery. There may therefore be assault without battery; but battery always implies an assault. Chambers.

Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Shakspeare.

Sir, quo' the lawyer, not to flatter ye,
You have as good and fair a battery
As heart can wish, and need not shame
The proudest man alive to claim. Hudibras.

BA'TTISH, bāt'tĭsh. adj. [from bat.] Resembling a bat.

To be out late in a battish humour. Gent. Instruct.

BA'TTLE, bāt'tl.[405] n. s. [bataille, Fr.]

1. A fight; an encounter between opposite armies. We generally say a battle of many, and a combat of two.

The English army, that divided was
Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one;
And means to give you battle presently. Shaksp.

The battle done, and they within our power,
She'll never see his pardon. Shakspeare.

The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. Eccles.

So they joined battle, and the heathen being discomfited fled into the plain. 1 Maccabees.

2. A body of forces, or division of an army.

The king divided his army into three battles; whereof the vanguard only, with wings, came to fight. Bacon.

3. The main body, as distinct from the van and rear.

Angus led the avant-guard, himself followed with the battle a good distance behind, and after came the arrier. Hayward.

4. We say to join battle; to give battle.

To BA'TTLE, bât'tl. v. n. [batailler, Fr.] To join battle; to contend in fight.

'Tis ours by craft and by surprize to gain:
'Tis yours to meet in arms, and battle in the plain. Prior.

We receive accounts of ladies battling it on both sides. Addison.

I own, he hates an action base,
His virtues battling with his place. Swift.

BA'TTLE-ARRA'Y, bât'tl-âr-râ'. n. s. [See BATTLE and ARRAY.] Array, or order, of battle.

Two parties of fine women, placed in the opposite side boxes, seemed drawn up in battle-array one against another. Addison.

BA'TTLE-AXE, bât'tl-âks. n. s. A weapon used anciently, probably the same with a bill.

Certain tinners, as they were working, found spear heads, battle-axes, and swords of copper, wrapped in linen clouts. Carew.

BA'TTLEDOOR, bât'tl-dôre. n. s. [so called from door, taken for a flat board, and battle, or striking.] An instrument with a handle and a flat board, used in play to strike a ball or shuttlecock.

Play-things, which are above their skill, as tops, gigs, battledoors, and the like, which are to be used with labour, should indeed be procured them. Locke.

BA'TTLEMENT, bât'tl-mênt. n. s. [generally supposed to be formed from battle, as the parts from whence a building is defended against assailants; perhaps only corrupted from bâtiment, Fr.] A wall raised round the top of a building, with embrasures, or interstices, to look through, to annoy an enemy.

And fix'd his head upon our battlements. Shaksp.

Thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thy house, if any man fall. Deuteronomy.

Through this we pass
Up to the highest battlement, from whence
The Trojans threw their darts. Denham.

Their standard, planted on the battlement,
Despair and death among the soldiers sent. Dryd.

No, I shan't envy him, whoe'er he be,
That stands upon the battlements of state;
I'd rather be secure than great. Norris.

The weighty mallet deals resounding blows,
Till the proud battlements her tow'rs inclose. Gay.

BA'TTY, bât'tê. adj. [from bat.] Belonging to a bat.

Till o'er their brows death, counterfeiting sleep,
With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep. Shaksp.

BA'VAROY, bâv-â-rôê'. n. s. A kind of cloak or surtout.

Let the loop'd bavaroy the fop embrace,
Or his deep cloak be spatter'd o'er with lace. Gay.

BAUBEE', bâw-bêê'. n. s. A word used in Scotland, and the northern counties, for a halfpenny.

Tho' in the draw'rs of my japan bureau,
To lady Gripeall I the Cæsars show,
'Tis equal to her ladyship or me
A copper Otho, or a Scotch baubee.
Bramst. Man of Taste.

BA'VIN, bâv'in. n. s. [of uncertain derivation.] A stick like those bound up in faggots; a piece of waste wood.

He rambled up and down
With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shaksp. Henry IV.

For moulded to the life in clouts
Th' have pick'd from dunghills thereabouts,
He's mounted on a hazel bavin,
A crop'd malignant baker gave him. Hudibras.

The truncheons make billet, bavin, and coals. Mortimer.

To BAULK, bâwk.[402 84] See BALK.

BA'WBLE, bâw'bl.[405] n. s. [Baubellum, in barbarous Latin, signified a jewel, or any thing valuable, but not necessary. Omnia baubella sua dedit Othoni. Hoveden. Probably from beau, Fr.] A gewgaw; a trifling piece of finery; a thing of more show than use; a trifle. It is in general, whether applied to persons or things, a term of contempt.

She haunts me in every place. I was on the sea bank with some Venetians, and thither comes the bauble, and falls me thus about my neck. Shaksp.

It is a paltry cap,
A custard coffin, a bauble, a silken pie. Shaksp.

If, in our contest, we do not interchange useful notions, we shall traffick toys and bawbles. Government of the Tongue.

This shall be writ to fright the fry away,
Who draw their little bawbles, when they play. Dryd.

A lady's watch needs neither figures nor wheels;
'Tis enough that 'tis loaded with bawbles and seals. Prior.

Our author then, to please you in your way,
Presents you now a bawble of a play,
In gingling rhyme. Granville.

A prince, the moment he is crown'd,
Inherits every virtue round,
As emblems of the sovereign pow'r,
Like other bawbles of the Tow'r. Swift.

BA'WBLING, bâw'bling.[410] adj. [from bawble.] Trifling; contemptible: a word not now in use, except in conversation.

A bawbling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprized;
With which such scathful grapple did he make,
With the most noble bottom of our fleet. Shaksp.

BA'WCOCK, bâw'kôk. n. s. [perhaps from beau, or baude and cock.] A familiar word, which seems to signify the same as fine fellow.

Why, how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, chuck? Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

BAWD, bâwd. n. s. [baude, old Fr.] A procurer, or procuress; one that introduces men and women to each other, for the promotion of debauchery.

If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds. Shaksp.

This commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid. Shakspeare.

Our author calls colouring lena sororis, the bawd of her sister design; she dresses her up, she paints her, she procures for the design, and makes lovers for her. Dryden.

To BAWD, bâwd. v. n. [from the noun.] To procure; to provide gallants with strumpets.

Leucippe is agent for the king's lust, and bawds, at the same time, for the whole court. Addison.

And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

BA'WDILY, bâw'dê-lê. adv. [from bawdy.] Obscenely.

BA'WDINESS, bâw'dê-nês. n. s. [from bawdy.] Obsceneness.

BA'WDRICK, bâw'drik. n. s. [See BALDRICK.] A belt.

The youths gilt swords wore at their thighs, with silver bawdricks bound. Chapman's Iliad.

BA'WDRY, bâw'drê. n. s. [contracted from bawdery, the practice of a bawd.]

1. A wicked practice of procuring and bringing whores and rogues together. Ayliffe.

Cheating and bawdry go together in the world. L'Estrange.

2. Obscenity; unchaste language.

Pr'ythee say on; he's for a jig, or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

I have no salt: no bawdry he doth mean:
For witty, in his language, is obscene. Ben Jonson.

It is most certain, that barefaced bawdry is the poorest pretence to wit imaginable. Dryden.

BA'WDY, bâw'dê. adj. [from bawd.] Obscene; unchaste: generally applied to language.

The bawdy wind, that kisses all it meets,
Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,
And will not hear 't. Shaksp. Othello.

Only they,
That come to hear a merry bawdy play,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakspeare.

Not one poor bawdy jest shall dare appear;
For now the batter'd veteran strumpets here
Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southern.

BA'WDY-HOUSE, bâw'dê-hôuse. n. s. A house where traffick is made by wickedness and debauchery.

Has the pope lately shut up the bawdy-houses, or does he continue to lay a tax upon sin? Dennis.

To BAWL, bâll. v. n. [balo, Lat.]

1. To hoot; to cry with great vehemence, whether for joy or pain. A word always used in contempt.

They bawl for freedom in their senseless mood,
And still revolt, when truth would set them free. Milton.

To cry the cause up heretofore,
And bawl the bishops out of door. Hudibras.

Through the thick shades th' eternal scribbler bawls,
And shakes the statues on their pedestals. Dryden.

From his lov'd home no lucre him can draw;
The senate's mad decrees he never saw,
Nor heard at bawling bars corrupted law. Dryden.

Loud menaces were heard, and foul disgrace,
And bawling infamy, in language base,
Till sense was lost in sound, and silence fled the place. Dryden's Fables.

So on the tuneful Margarita's tongue
The list'ning nymphs and ravish'd heroes hung;
But cits and fops the heav'n-born musick blame,
And bawl, and hiss, and damn her into fame. Smith.

I have a race of orderly elderly people, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am only giddy and would sleep. Swift.

2. To cry as a froward child.

A little child was bawling, and a woman chiding it. L'Estrange.

If they were never suffered to have what they cried for, they would never, with bawling and peevishness, contend for mastery. Locke.

My husband took him in, a dirty boy; it was the business of the servants to attend him, the rogue did bawl and make such a noise. Arbuthnot.

To BAWL, bâll. v. a. To proclaim as a crier.

It grieved me when I saw labours, which had cost so much, bawled about by common hawkers. Swift.

BA'WSIN, bâw'sîn. n. s. A badger. Dict.

BAY, bâ.[220] adj. [badius, Lat.]

A bay horse is what is inclining to a chestnut; and this colour is various, either a light bay or a dark bay, according as it is less or more deep. There are also coloured horses, that are called dappled bays. All bay horses are commonly called brown by the common people.

All bay horses have black manes, which distinguish them from the sorrel, that have red or white manes.

There are light bays and gilded bays, which are somewhat of a yellowish colour. The chestnut bay is that which comes nearest to the colour of the chestnut. Farrier's Dict.

My lord, you gave good words the other day of a bay courser I rode on. 'Tis yours because you liked it. Shakspeare.

Poor Tom! proud of heart to ride on a bay trotting horse over four inch'd bridges. Shakspeare.

His colour grey,
For beauty dappled, or the brightest bay. Dryden.

BAY, bâ. n. s. [baye, Dutch.]

1. An opening into the land, where the water is shut in on all sides, except at the entrance.

A reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay. Shaksp.

We have also some works in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore for some works, wherein is required the air and vapour of the sea. Bacon.

Hail, sacred solitude! from this calm bay
I view the world's tempestuous sea. Roscommon.

Here in a royal bed the waters sleep,
When tir'd at sea, within this bay they creep. Dryd.

Some of you have bay. Dryden.

2. A pond head raised to keep in store of water for driving a mill.

BAY, bâ. n. s. [abboi, Fr. signifies the last extremity; as, Innocence est aux abboins. Boileau. Innocence is in the utmost distress. It is taken from abboi, the barking of a dog at hand, and thence signified the condition of a stag when the hounds were almost upon him.]

1. The state of any thing surrounded by enemies, and obliged to face them by an impossibility of escape.

This ship, for fifteen hours, sate like a stag among hounds at the bay, and was sieged and fought with, in turn, by fifteen great ships. Bacon.

Fair liberty, pursued and meant a prey
To lawless power, here turn'd, and stood at bay. Denham.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Embolden'd by despair, he stood at bay;
Resolv'd on death, he dissipates his fears,
And bounds aloft against the pointed spears. Dryd.

2. Some writers, perhaps mistaking the meaning, have used bay as referred to the assailant, for distance beyond which no approach could be made.

All, fir'd with noble emulation, strive;
And with a storm of darts to distance drive
The Trojan chief; who, held at bay, from far
On his Vulcanian orb sustain'd the war. Dryden.

We have now, for ten years together, turned the whole force and expence of the war, where the enemy was best able to hold us at a bay. Swift.

BAY, bâ. n. s. In architecture, a term used to signify the magnitude of a building; as, if a barn consists of a floor and two heads, where they lay corn, they call it a barn of two bays. These bays are from fourteen to twenty feet long, and floors from ten to twelve broad, and usually twenty feet long, which is the breadth of the barn. Builder's Dict.

If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent the fairest house in it after threepence a bay. Shaksp.

There may be kept one thousand bushels in each bay, there being sixteen bays, each eighteen feet long, about seventeen wide, or three hundred square feet in each bay. Mortimer.

BAY Tree, bâ'trêê. [laurus, Lat.] The tree, as is generally thought, which is translated laurel, and of which honorary garlands were anciently made.

I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Psalms.

BAY, bâ. n. s. A poetical name for an honorary crown or garland, bestowed as a prize for any kind of victory or excellence.

Beneath his reign shall Eusden wear the bays. Pope.

To BAY, bâ. v. n. [abboyer, Fr.]

1. To bark as a dog at a thief, or at the game which he pursues.

And all the while she stood upon the ground,
The wakeful dogs did never cease to bay. Fairy Q.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursued the visionary maid;
She rent the heav'n with loud laments, imploring aid. Dryden's Fables.

2. [From bay, an inclosed place.] To encompass about; to shut in.

We are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies. Shaksp.

To BAY, bâ. v. a. To follow with barking; to bark at.

I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in the wood of Crete they bay'd the boar
With hounds of Sparta. Shaksp.

If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welch
Baying him at the heels. Shaksp.

BAY Salt, bâ'sâlt. Salt made of sea water, which receives its consistence from the heat of the sun, and is so called from its brown colour. By letting the sea water into square pits or basons, its surface being struck and agitated by the rays of the sun, it thickens at first imperceptibly, and becomes covered over with a slight crust, which hardening by the continuance of the heat, is wholly converted into salt. The water in this condition is scalding hot, and the crystallization is perfected in eight, ten, or at most fifteen days. Chambers.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give sound, which we call crackling, puffing, spitting, &c. as in bay salt and bay leaves cast into fire. Bacon.

BAY Window, bâ'wîn'dô. A window jutting outward, and therefore forming a kind of bay or hollow in the room.

It hath bay windows transparent as barricadoes. Shakspeare.

BAY Yarn, bâ'yârn.[78] A denomination sometimes used promiscuously with woollen yarn. Chambers.

BA'YARD, bâ'yârd.[78] n. s. [from bay.] A bay horse.

Blind bayard moves the mill. Philips.

BA'YONET, bây'ûn-nêt. n. s. [bayonette, Fr.] A short sword or dagger fixed at the end of a musket, by which the foot hold off the horse.

One of the black spots is long and slender, and resembles a dagger or bayonet. Woodward.

BAYZE, bâze. See BAIZE.

BDE'LLIUM, dêl'yûm. n. s. [βδέλλιον; בדלה.] An aromatic gum brought from the Levant, used as a medicine, and a perfume. Bdellium is mentioned both by the ancient naturalists, and in Scripture; but it is doubtful whether any of these be the same with the modern kind. Chamb.

This bdellium is a tree of the bigness of an olive, whereof Arabia hath great plenty, which yieldeth a certain gum, sweet to smell to, but bitter in taste, called also bdellium. The Hebrews take the loadstone for bdellium. Raleigh.

To BE, bêê. v. n. [This word is so remarkably irregular, that it is necessary to set down many of its terminations.

Present. I am, thou art, he is, we are, &c.
eom, eaꝑt, ıꝑ, aꝑon, Sax.

Preter. I was, thou wast or wert, pæꝛ, pæꝑe,
he was, we were, &c.
paꝛ, pæꝑon, Sax.

The conjunctive mood.

I be, thou beest, he be, we be, &c.
beo, bıꝑt, beo, beon, Sax.]

1. To have some certain state, condition, quality, or accident; as, the man is wise.

Seventy senators died
By their proscriptions, Cicero being one. Shaksp.

He hath to-night been in unusual pleasure. Shaksp.

Be what thou hop'st to be, or what thou art,
Resign to death, it is not worth enjoying. Shaksp.

Be but about
To say she is a goodly lady, and
The justice of your hearts will add thereto,
'Tis pity she is not honest, honourable. Shaksp.

Let them shew the former things what they be, that we may consider them. Isaiah.

Therefore be sure,
Thou, when the bridegroom with his feastful friends
Passes to bliss at the mid hour of night,
Hast gain'd thy entrance, virgin wise and pure. Milton.

It is not easy to discern what such men would be at. Stillingfleet.

To say a man has a clear idea of quantity, without knowing how great it is, is to say, he has a clear idea of the number of the sands, who knows not how many they be. Locke.

2. It is the auxiliary verb by which the verb passive is formed.

The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees

3. To exist; to have existence.

The times have been,
That when the brains were out the man would die. Macbeth.

Here cease, ye pow'rs, and let your vengeance end,
Troy is no more, and can no more offend. Dryden.

All th' impossibilities, which poets
Count to extravagance of loose description,
Shall sooner be. Rowe.

To be, contents his natural desire;
He asks no angel's wing, nor seraph's fire. Pope.

4. To have something by appointment or rule.

If all political power be derived only from Adam, and he to descend only to his successive heirs, by the ordinance of God, and divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government. Locke.

5. Let BE. Do not meddle with; leave untouched.

Let be, said he, my prey. Dryden.

BEACH, bèètsh.[227] n. s. The shore, particularly that part that is dashed by the waves; the strand.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice. Shaksp. King Lear.

Deep to the rocks of hell the gather'd beach
They fasten'd, and the mole immense wrought on Over the foaming deep. Milton.

They find the washed amber further out upon the beaches and shores, where it has been longer exposed. Woodward.

BE'ACHED, bèètsh'èd. adj. [from beach.] Exposed to the waves.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which, once a day, with his embossed froth
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shaksp.

BE'ACHY, bèètsh'è. adj. [from beach.] Having beaches.

The beachy girdle of the ocean
Too wide for Neptune's hips. Shaksp.

BE'ACON, bè'kn.[170] n. s. [beacon, Sax. from becn a signal, and becnan, whence beckon, to make a signal.]

1. Something raised on an eminence, to be fired on the approach of an enemy, to alarm the country.

His blazing eyes like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons set in open fields
Send forth their flames. Fairy Queen.

Modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise. Shaksp.

The king seemed to account of Perkin as a May-game; yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts, and erecting more where they stood too thin. Bacon.

No flaming beacons cast their blaze afar,
The dreadful signal of invasive war. Gay.

2. Marks erected, or lights made in the night, to direct navigators in their courses, and warn them from rocks, shallows, and sand-banks.

BEAD, bède.[227] n. s. [beaðe prayer, Sax.]

1. Small globes or balls of glass or pearl, or other substances, strung upon a thread, and used by the Romanists to count their prayers; from whence the phrase to tell beads, or to be at one's beads, is to be at prayer.

That aged dame, the lady of the place,
Who all this while was busy at her beads. Fairy Queen.

Thy voice I seem in every hymn to hear,
With ev'ry bead I drop too soft a tear. Pope.

2. Little balls worn about the neck for ornament.

With scarfs and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all such knav'ry. Shaksp.

3. Any globular bodies.

Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow. Shaksp.

Several yellow lumps of amber, almost like beads, with one side flat, had fastened themselves to the bottom. Boyle.

BEAD Tree, bède' trèè. [azedarach.] A plant.

BE'ADLE, bè'dl.[227 405] n. s. [bydel, Sax. a messenger; bedeau, Fr. bedel, Span. bedelle, Dutch.]

1. A messenger or servitor belonging to a court. Cowell.

2. A petty officer in parishes, whose business it is to punish petty offenders.

A dog's obey'd in office.
Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand;
Why dost thou lash that whore? Shaksp.

They ought to be taken care of in this condition, either by the beadle or the magistrate. Spectator.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

BE'ADROLL, bède'rôll. n. s. [from bead and roll.] A catalogue of those who are to be mentioned at prayers.

The king, for the better credit of his espials abroad, did use to have them cursed by name amongst the beadroll of the king's enemies. Bacon's Henry VII.

BE'ADSMAN, bèèdz'mân. n. s. [from bead and man.] A man employed in praying, generally in praying for another.

An holy hospital,
In which seven beadsmen, that had vowed all
Their life to service of high heaven's king. Fairy Queen.

In thy danger,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer;
For I will be thy beadsman, Valentine. Shaksp.

BE'AGLE, bè'gl.[227 405] n. s. [bigle, Fr.] A small hound with which hares are hunted.

The rest were various huntings.
The graceful goddess was array'd in green;
About her feet were little beagles seen,
That watch'd with upward eyes the motions of their queen. Dryden's Fables.

To plains with well-bred beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare. Pope.

BEAK, bèke.[227] n. s. [bec, Fr. pig, Welsh.]

1. The bill or horny mouth of a bird.

His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloys his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

He saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing. Milton's Par. Reg.

The magpie, lighting on the stock,
Stood chatt'ring with incessant din,
And with her beak gave many a knock. Swift.

2. A piece of brass like a beak, fixed at the end of the ancient gallies, with which they pierced their enemies. It can now be used only for the fore part of a ship.

With boiling pitch, another near at hand,
From friendly Sweden brought, the seams instops;
Which, well laid o'er, the salt sea waves withstand,
And shakes them from the rising beak in drops. Dryden.

3. A beak is a little shoe, at the toe about an inch long, turned up and fastened in upon the fore-part of the hoof. Farrier's Dict.

4. Any thing ending in a point like a beak; as, the spout of a cup; a prominence of land.

Cuddenbeak, from a well-advanced promontory, which entitled it beak, taketh a prospect of the river. Carew's Survey.

BE'AKED, bè'kèd or bèkt.[362] adj. [from beak.] Having a beak; having the form of a beak.

And question'd every gust of rugged winds,
That blows from off each beaked promontory. Milton.

BE'AKER, bè'kûr.[98] n. s. [from beak.] A cup with a spout in the form of a bird's beak.

And into pikes and musqueteers
Stamp beakers, cups, and porringers. Hudibras.

With dulcet bev'rage this the beaker crown'd,
Fair in the midst, with gilded cups around. Pope's Odyssey.

BEAL, bèle.[227] n. s. [bolla, Ital.] A whelk or pimple.

To BEAL, bèle. v. a. [from the noun.] To ripen; to gather matter, or come to a head, as a sore does.

BEAM, bème.[227] n. s. [beam, Sax. a tree.]

1. The main piece of timber that supports the house.

A beam is the largest piece of wood in a building, which always lies across the building or the walls, serving to support the principal rafters of the roof, and into which the feet of the principal rafters are framed. No building has less than two beams, one at each head. Into these, the girders of the garret floor are also framed; and, if the building be of timber, the tezel-tenons of the posts are framed. The proportions of beams, in or near London, are fixed by act of parliament. A beam, fifteen feet long, must be seven inches on one side its square, and five on the other; if it be sixteen feet long, one side must be eight inches, the other six; and so proportionable to their lengths. Builder's Dict.

The building of living creatures is like the building of a timber house; the walls and other parts have columns and beams, but the roof is tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon.

He heav'd, with more than human force, to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team,
And rais'd from thence he reach'd the neighb'ring beam. Dryden.

2. Any large and long piece of timber: a beam must have more length than thickness, by which it is distinguished from a block.

But Lycus, swifter,
Springs to the walls, and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden's Æneid.

3. That part of a balance, at the ends of which the scales are suspended.

Poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. Shakspeare.

If the length of the sides in the balance, and the weights at the ends, be both equal, the beam will be in a horizontal situation: but if either the weights alone be unequal, or the distances alone, the beam will accordingly decline. Wilkins.

4. The horn of a stag.

And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenge, and his clashing beam. Denham.

5. The pole of a chariot; that piece of wood which runs between the horses.

Juturna heard, and, seiz'd with mortal fear,
Forc'd from the beam her brother's charioteer. Dryden.

6. Among weavers, a cylindrical piece of wood belonging to the loom, on which the web is gradually rolled as it is wove.

The staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam. 1 Chron.

7. BEAM of an anchor. The straight part or shank of an anchor, to which the hooks are fastened.

8. BEAM Compasses. A wooden or brass instrument, with sliding sockets, to carry several shifting points, in order to draw circles with very long radii; and useful in large projections, for drawing the furniture on wall dials. Harris.

9. [runnebeam, Sax. a ray of the sun.] The ray of light emitted from some luminous body, or received by the eye.

Pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down stretch
Below the beam of sight. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Pleasing, yet cold, like Cynthia's silver beam.
Dryden.

As heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour.
Pope.

To BEAM, bème.[227] v. n. [from the noun.] To emit rays or beams.

Each emanation of his fires
That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires. Pope.

Dryden.

Do not charge your coins with more uses than they can bear. It is the method of such as love any science, to discover all others in it.
Addison on Medals.

Had he not been eager to find mistakes, he would not have strained my works to such a sense as they will not bear. Atterbury.

In all criminal cases, the most favourable interpretation should be put upon words that they possibly can bear. Swift.

16. To produce, as fruit.

There be some plants that bear no flower, and yet bear fruit: there be some that bear flowers, and no fruit: there be some that bear neither flowers nor fruit. Bacon.

They wing'd their flight aloft; then stooping low,
Perch'd on the double tree that bears the golden bough. Dryden.

Say, shepherd, say in what glad soil appears
A wond'rous tree that sacred monarchs bears. Pope.

17. To bring forth, as a child.

The queen that bore thee
Oftner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakspeare.

Ye know that my wife bare two sons. Genesis.

What could the muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The muse herself, for her enchanting son? Milton.

The same Æneas, whom fair Venus bore
To fam'd Anchises on th' Idean shore. Dryden.

18. To give birth to; to be the native place of.

Here dwelt the man divine whom Samos bore,
But now self-banish'd from his native shore. Dryd.

19. To possess, as power or honour.

When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station.
Addison's Cato.

20. To gain; to win: commonly with away.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace. Shak.

Because the Greek and Latin have ever borne away the prerogative from all other tongues, they shall serve as touchstones to make our trials by.
Camden.

Some think to bear it by speaking a great word, and being peremptory; and go on, and take by admittance that which they cannot make good. Bacon.

21. To maintain; to keep up.

He finds the pleasure and credit of bearing a part in the conversation, and of hearing his reasons approved. Locke.

22. To support any thing good or bad.

Having pawned a full suit of clothes for a sum of money, which my operator assured me was the last he should want to bring all our matters to bear. Guardian.

5. To act in any character.

Instruct me
How I may formally in person bear
Like a true friar. Shaksp.

6. To tend; to be directed to any point; with a particle to determine the meaning; as, up, away, onward.

The oily drops, swimming on the spirit of wine, moved restlessly to and fro, sometimes bearing up to one another, as if all were to unite into one body; and then falling off, and continuing to shift places. Boyle.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to fly:
With such alacrity they bore away. Dryden.

Whose navy like a stiff-stretched cord did shew,
Till he bore in, and bent them into flight. Dryden.

On this the hero fix'd an oak in sight,
The mark to guide the mariners aright:
To bear with this, the seamen stretch their oars,
Then round the rock they steer, and seek the former shores. Dryden.

In a convex mirrour, we view the figures and all other things which bear out with more life and strength than nature itself. Dryden.

7. To act as an impellent, opponent, or as a reciprocal power; generally with the particles upon or against.

We were encounter'd by a mighty rock,
Which being violently borne upon,
Our helpless ship was splitted in the midst. Shaks.

Upon the tops of mountains, the air which bears against the restagnant quicksilver is less pressed. Boyle.

The sides bearing one against the other, they could not lie so close at the bottoms. Burnet.

As a lion, bounding in his way,
With force augmented bears against his prey,
Sideling to seize. Dryden.

Because the operations to be performed by the teeth require a considerable strength in the instruments which move the lower jaw, nature hath provided this with strong muscles, to make it bear forcibly against the upper jaw. Ray.

The weight of the body doth bear most upon the knee joints in raising itself up; and most upon the muscles of the thighs, in coming down. Wilkins.

The waves of the sea bear violently and rapidly upon some shores, the water being pent up by the land. Broome.

10. To bear up. To stand firm without falling; not to sink; not to faint or fail.

So long as nature
Will bear up with this exercise, so long
I daily vow to use it. Shaksp.

Persons in distress may speak of themselves with dignity; it shews a greatness of soul, that they bear up against the storms of fortune. Broome.

The consciousness of integrity, the sense of a life spent in doing good, will enable a man to bear up under any change of circumstances. Atterbury.

When our commanders and soldiers were raw and unexperienced we lost battles and towns: yet we bore up then, as the French do now; nor was there any thing decisive in their successes. Swift.

11. To bear with. To endure an unpleasing thing.

They are content to bear with my absence and folly. Sidney.

Though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men; yet they lie deadly, that tell you, you have good faces. Shaksp.

Look you lay home to him;
Tell him his pranks have been too broad to bear with. Shaksp.

Bear with me then, if lawful what I ask. Milt.

BEAR, bâre.[73] n. s. [beꝑa, Saxon; ursus, Lat.]

1. A rough savage animal.

Some have falsely reported, that bears bring their young into the world shapeless, and that their dams lick them into form. The dams go no longer than thirty days, and generally produce five young ones. In the winter, they lie hid and asleep, the male forty days, and the female four months; and so soundly for the first fourteen days, that blows will not wake them. In the sleepy season they are said to have no nourishment but from licking their feet. This animal has naturally an hideous look, but when enraged it is terrible; and as rough and stupid as it seems to be, it is capable of discipline; it leaps, dances, and plays a thousand little tricks at the sound of a trumpet. They abound in Poland. In the remote northern countries the species is white. Calmet.

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me——
——Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shaksp.

Thou'dst shun a bear;
But if thy flight lay tow'rd the raging sea,
Thou'dst meet the bear i' th' mouth. Shaksp.

2. The name of two constellations, called the greater and lesser bear; in the tail of the lesser bear, is the pole-star.

E'en then when Troy was by the Greeks o'erthrown,
The bear opposed to bright Orion shone. Creech.

The design of utterly extirpating monarchy and episcopacy, the presbyterians alone begun, continued, and would have ended, if they had not been bearded by that new party, with whom they could not agree about dividing the spoil. Swift.

BE'ARDED, bêêrd'êd. adj. [from beard.]

1. Having a beard.

Think every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,
May draw with you. Shaksp.

Old prophecies foretel our fall at hand,
When bearded men in floating castles land. Dryd.

2. Having sharp prickles, as corn.

As when a field
Of Ceres, ripe for harvest, waving bends
Her bearded grove of ears, which way the wind
Sways them. Milton.

The fierce virago
Flew o'er the field, nor hurt the bearded grain. Dryden.

3. Barbed or jagged.

Thou should'st have pull'd the secret from my breast,
Torn out the bearded steel to give me rest. Dryd.

BEATI'FICK, bê-â-tîf'îk.[509] } cus, low Lat. from beatus, happy.] That which has the power of making happy, or completing fruition; blissful. It is used only of heavenly fruition after death.

Admiring the riches of heaven's pavement
Than aught divine or holy else, enjoy'd
In vision beatifick. Milton.

It is also their felicity to have no faith; for enjoying the beatifical vision in the fruition of the object of faith, they have received the full evacuation of it. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

We may contemplate upon the greatness and strangeness of the beatifick vision; how a created eye should be so fortified, as to bear all those glories that stream from the fountain of uncreated light. South.

BEATI'FICALLY, bė-ă-tĭf'ė-kăl-lė. adv. [from beatifical.] In such a manner as to complete happiness.

Beatifically to behold the face of God, in the fulness of wisdom, righteousness, and peace, is blessedness no way incident unto the creatures beneath man. Hakewill.

BEATIFICA'TION, bė-ăt'ė-fė-kā'shŭn. n. s. [from beatifick.] A term in the Romish church, distinguished from canonization. Beatification is an acknowledgment made by the pope, that the person beatified is in heaven, and therefore may be reverenced as blessed; but is not a concession of the honours due to saints, which are conferred by canonization.

To BEA'TIFY, bė-ăt'ė-fī.[183] v. a. [beatifico, Lat.]

1. To make happy; to bless with the completion of celestial enjoyment.

The use of spiritual conference is unimaginable and unspeakable, especially if free and unrestrained, bearing an image of that conversation which is among angels and beatified saints. Hammond.

We shall know him to be the fullest good, the nearest to us, and the most certain; and, consequently, the most beatifying of all others. Brown.

I wish I had the wings of an angel, to have ascended into Paradise, and to have beheld the forms of those beatified spirits, from which I might have copied my archangel. Dryden.

2. To settle the character of any person, by a public acknowledgment that he is received in heaven, though he is not invested with the dignity of a saint.

Over against this church stands an hospital, erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified, though never sainted. Addison.

BE'ATING, bēte'ĭng.[410] n. s. [from beat.] Correction; punishment by blows.

Playwright, convict of public wrongs to men,
Takes private beatings, and begins again. B. Jonson.

BEA'TITUDE, bė-ăt'ė-tūde. n. s. [beatitudo, Lat.]

1. Blessedness; felicity; happiness: commonly used of the joys of heaven.

The end of that government, and of all men's aims, is agreed to be beatitude, that is, his being completely well. Digby.

This is the image and little representation of heaven; it is beatitude in picture. Taylor.

He set out the felicity of his heaven, by the delights of sense; slightly passing over the accomplishment of the soul, and the beatitude of that part which earth and visibilities too weakly affect. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. A declaration of blessedness made by our Saviour to particular virtues.

BEAU, bō.[245] n. s. [beau, Fr. It is sounded like bo, and has often the French plural beaux, sounded as boes.] A man of dress; a man whose great care is to deck his person.

What will not beaux attempt to please the fair? Dryden.

The water nymphs are too unkind
To Vill'roy; are the land nymphs so?
And fly they all, at once combin'd
To shame a general, and a beau? Prior.

You will become the delight of nine ladies in ten, and the envy of ninety-nine beaux in a hundred. Swift.

BE'AVER, bēė-vŭr,[227 98] n. s. [bievre, Fr. fiber, Lat.]

1. An animal, otherwise called the castor, amphibious, and remarkable for his art in building his habitation; of which many wonderful accounts are delivered by travellers. His skin is very valuable on account of the fur.

The beaver being hunted, biteth off his stones, knowing that for them only his life is sought. Hakewill.

They placed this invention upon the beaver, for the sagacity and wisdom of that animal; indeed from its artifice in building. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. A hat of the best kind, so called from being made of the fur of beaver.

You see a smart rhetorician turning his hat, moulding it into different cocks, examining the lining and the button during his harangue: a deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of a nation. Addison.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares. Gay.

3. The part of a helmet that covers the face. [baviere, Fr.]

His dreadful hideous head,
Close couched on the beaver, seem'd to throw
From flaming mouth bright sparkles fiery red. Spenser.

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps. Shaksp.

He was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the staff going in at his beaver. Bacon.

BE'AVERED, bēė'vŭrd.[362] adj. [from beaver.] Covered with a beaver; wearing a beaver.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears,
Dropping with infants' blood, and mothers' tears. Pope.

BEAU'ISH, bō'ĭsh.[245] adj. [from beau.] Befitting a beau; foppish.

BEAU'TEOUS, bū'tshė-ŭs.[263] adj. [from beauty.] Fair; elegant in form; pleasing to the sight; beautiful. This word is chiefly poetical.

I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife,
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous. Shaksp.

Alas! not hoping to subdue,
I only to the flight aspir'd;
To keep the beauteous foe in view,
Was all the glory I desir'd. Prior.

BEAU'TEOUSLY, bū'tshė-ŭs-lė. adv. [from beauteous.] In a beauteous manner; in a manner pleasing to the sight; beautifully.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed. Taylor

BEAU'TEOUSNESS, bū'tshė-ŭs-nĕs. n. s. [from beauteous.] The state or quality of being beauteous; beauty.

From less virtue, and less beauteousness,
The gentiles fram'd them gods and goddesses. Donne.

BEAU'TIFUL, bū'tė-fŭl. adj. [from beauty and full.] Fair; having the qualities that constitute beauty.

He stole away and took by strong hand all the beautiful women in his time. Raleigh.

The most important part of painting, is to know what is most beautiful in nature, and most proper for that art; that which is the most beautiful, is the most noble subject: so, in poetry, tragedy is more beautiful than comedy, because the persons are greater whom the poet instructs, and consequently the instructions of more benefit to mankind. Dryden.

Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds,
And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULLY, bū'tė-fŭl-lė. adv. [from beautiful.] In a beautiful manner.

No longer shall the boddice, aptly lac'd
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,
That air and harmony of shape express,
Fine by degrees, and beautifully less. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULNESS, bū'tė-fŭl-nĕs. n. s. [from beautiful.] The quality of being beautiful; beauty; excellence of form.

To BEAU'TIFY, bū'tė-fī.[183] v. a. [from beauty.] To adorn; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to add beauty to.

Never was sorrow more sweetly set forth; their faces seeming rather to beautify their sorrow, than their sorrow to cloud the beauty of their faces. Hayward.

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs and return,
Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke? Shaksp.

These were not created to beautify the earth alone, but for the use of man and beast. Raleigh.

How all conspire to grace
Th' extended earth, and beautify her face. Blackmore.

There is charity and justice; and the one serves to heighten and beautify the other. Atterbury.

To BEAU'TIFY, bū'tė-fī.[183] v. n. To grow beautiful; to advance in beauty.

It must be a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him by greater degrees of resemblance. Addison.

BEAU'TY, bū'tė. n. s. [beauté, Fr.]

1. That assemblage of graces, or proportion of parts, which pleases the eye.

Beauty consists of a certain composition of colour and figure, causing delight in the beholder. Locke.

Your beauty was the cause of that effect,
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep.—
If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shaksp.

Beauty is best in a body that hath rather dignity of presence than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study for the most part rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express. Bacon.

Of the beauty of the eye I shall say little, leaving that to poets and orators: that it is a very pleasant and lovely object to behold, if we consider the figure, colours, splendour of it, is the least I can say. Ray.

He view'd their twining branches with delight,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight. Pope.

2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament.

The ancient pieces are beautiful, because they resemble the beauties of nature; and nature will ever be beautiful, which resembles those beauties of antiquity. Dryden.

Wherever you place a patch, you destroy a beauty. Addison.

3. Any thing more eminently excellent than the rest of that with which it is united.

This gave me an occasion of looking backward on some beauties of my author in his former books. Dryden.

With incredible pains have I endeavoured to copy

BE'DMAKER, bĕd'mā-kûr. n. s. [from bed and make.] A person in the universities, whose office it is to make the beds, and clean the chambers.

I was deeply in love with my bedmaker, upon which I was rusticated for ever. Spectator.

BE'DMATE, bĕd'māte. n. s. [from bed and mate.] A bedfellow; one that partakes of the same bed.

Had I so good occasion to lie long
As you, prince Paris, nought but heav'nly business
Should rob my bedmate of my company. Shakspeare.

BE'DMOULDING, bĕd'mōld-ing.
BE'DDING MOULDING, bĕd'ding-mōld-ing } n. s. [from bed and mould.] A term used by workmen, to signify those members in the cornice, which are placed below the coronet. Builder's Dict.

BE'DPOST, bĕd'pōst. n. s. [from bed and post.] The post at the corner of the bed, which supports the canopy.

I came the next day prepared, and placed her in a clear light, her head leaning to a bedpost, another standing behind, holding it steady. Wiseman's Surg.

BE'DPRESSER, bĕd'prĕs-sûr. n. s. [from bed and press.] A heavy lazy fellow.

This sanguine coward, this bedpresser, this horseback breaker, this huge hill of flesh. Shakspeare.

To BEDRA'GGLE, bĕ-drâg'gl.[405] v. a. [from be and draggle.] To soil the clothes, by suffering them, in walking, to reach the dirt.

Poor Patty Blount, no more be seen
Bedraggled in my walks so green. Swift.

To BEDRE'NCH, bĕ-drĕnsh'. v. a. [from be and drench.] To drench; to soak; to saturate with moisture.

Far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land.
Shakspeare.

BE'DRID, bĕd'rĭd. adj. [from bed and ride.] Confined to the bed by age or sickness.

Norway, uncle of young Fontinbras,
Who, impotent and bedrid, scarcely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose. Shakspeare.
Lies he not bedrid? and, again, does nothing,
But what he did being childish? Shakspeare.
Now, as a myriad
Of ants durst th' emperor's lov'd snake invade;
The crawling galleys, seagulls, finny chips,
Might brave our pinnaces, our bedrid ships. Donne.
Hanging old men, who were bedrid, because they would not discover where their money was. Claren.
Infirm persons, when they come to be so weak as to be fix'd to their beds, hold out many years; some have lain bedrid twenty years. Ray.

BE'DRITE, bĕd'rīte. n. s. [from bed and rite.] The privilege of the marriage bed.

Whose vows are, that no bedrite shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be lighted. Shakspeare.

To BEDRO'P, bĕ-drŏp'. v. a. [from be and drop.] To besprinkle; to mark with spots or drops; to speckle.

Not so thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedrop'd with blood of Gorgon. Milton.
Our plenteous streams a various race supply:
The silver eel, in shining volumes roll'd;
The yellow carp, in scales bedrop'd with gold. Pope.

BE'DSTAFF, bĕd'stăf. n. s. [bed and staff.] A wooden pin stuck anciently on the sides of the bedstead, to hold the clothes from slipping on either side.

Hostess, accommodate us with a bedstaff.
Ben Jonson's Every Man in his Humour.

BE'DSTEAD, bĕd'stĕd. n. s. [from bed and stēad.] The frame on which the bed is placed.

Chimnies with scorn rejecting smoke;
Stools, tables, chairs, and bedsteads broke. Swift.

BE'DSTRAW, bĕd'strâw. n. s. [from bed and straw.] The straw laid under a bed to make it soft.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture; or the chamber or bedstraw kept close, and not aired. Bacon.

BEDSWE'RVER, bĕd'swĕr-vûr. n. s. [from bed and swerve.] One that is false to the bed; one that ranges or swerves from one bed to another.

She's a bedswerver, even as bad as those
That vulgars give the boldest titles to. Shakspeare.

BE'DTIME, bĕd'time. n. s. [from bed and time.] The hour of rest; sleeping time.

What masks, what dances shall we have,
To wear away this long age of three hours,
Between our after-supper and bedtime? Shakspeare.
After evening repasts, till bedtime, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion. Milton.
The scouring drunkard if he does not fight
Before his bedtime, takes no rest that night. Dryden.

To BEDU'NG, bĕ-dŭng'. v. a. [from be and dung.] To cover, or manure with dung.

To BEDU'ST, bĕ-dŭst'. v. a. [from be and dust.] To sprinkle with dust.

BE'DWARD, bĕd'wârd. adv. [from bed and ward.] Toward bed.

In heart
As merry as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burnt to bedward. Shakspeare.

To BEDWA'RF, bĕ-dwârf'. v. a. [from be and dwarf.] To make little; to hinder in growth; to stunt.

'Tis shrinking, not close weaving, that hath thus
In mind and body both bedwarfed us. Donne.

BE'DWORK, bĕd'wûrk. n. s. [from bed and work.] Work done in bed; work performed without toil of the hands.

The still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fulness call them on, and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemy's weight:
Why this hath not a finger's dignity,
They call this bedwork, mapp'ry, closet war. Shaks.

BEE, bēē. n. s. [beo, Saxon.]

1. The animal that makes honey, remarkable for its industry and art.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that, by a ruling nature, teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakspeare.
From the Moorish camp
There has been heard a distant humming noise,
Like bees disturb'd, and arming in their hives. Dryd.
A company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers, and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other viands. Locke.

2. An industrious and careful person. This signification is only used in familiar language.

BEE-EATER, bēē'ē-tûr. n. s. [from bee and eat.] A bird that feeds upon bees.

BEE-FLOWER, bēē'flŏŭ-ûr. n. s. [from bee and flower.] A species of fool-stones. Miller.

BEE-GARDEN, bēē'gâr-dn.[103] n. s. [from bee and garden.] A place to set hives of bees in.

A convenient and necessary place ought to be made choice of for your apiary, or bee-garden. Mortimer.

BEE-HIVE, bēē'hīve. n. s. [from bee and hive.] The case, or box, in which bees are kept.

BEE-MASTER, bēē'mâs-tûr. n. s. [from bee and master.] One that keeps bees.

They that are bee-masters, and have not care enough of them, must not expect to reap any considerable advantage by them. Mortimer.

BEECH, bēētsh. n. s. [bece or boc, Saxon; fagus, Lat.]

There is but one species of this tree at present known, except two varieties, with striped leaves. It will grow to a considerable stature, though the soil be stoney and barren; as also, upon the declivities of mountains. The shade of this tree is very injurious to plants, but is believed to be very salubrious to human bodies. The timber is of great use to turners and joiners. The mast is very good to fatten swine and deer. Miller.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood.
Dryden.
Nor is that sprightly wildness in their notes,
Which, clear and vigorous, warbles from the beech.
Thomson.

BE'ECHEN, bēē'tshn.[103] adj. [bucene, Sax.] Consisting of the wood of the beech; belonging to the beech.

With diligence he'll serve us when we dine,
And in plain beechen vessels fill our wine. Dryden.

BEEF, bēēf. n. s. [boeuf, French.]

1. The flesh of black cattle prepared for food.

What say you to a piece of beef and mustard?
Shakspeare.
The fat of roasted beef falling on birds, will baste them. Swift.

2. An ox, bull, or cow, considered as fit for food. In this sense it has the plural beeves; the singular is seldom found.

A pound of man's flesh
Is not so estimable or profitable,
As flesh of muttons, beeves, or goats. Shakspeare.
Alcinous slew twelve sheep, eight white-tooth'd swine,
Two crook-haunch'd beeves. Chapman.
There was not any captain, but had credit for more victuals than we spent there; and yet they had of me fifty beeves among them. Sir Walt. Raleigh.
On hides of beeves, before the palace gate,
Sad spoils of luxury! the suitors sate. Pope.

BEEF, bēēf. adj. [from the substantive.] Consisting of the flesh of black cattle.

If you are employed in marketing, do not accept of a treat of a beef steak, and a pot of ale, from the butcher. Swift.

BEEF-EATER, bēēf'ē-tûr. n. s. [from beef and eat, because the commons is beef when on waiting. Mr. Steevens derives it thus: Beef-eater may come from beaufetier, one who attends at the sideboard, which was anciently placed in a beaufet. The business of the beef-eaters was, and perhaps is still, to attend the king at meals.] A yeoman of the guard.

BEEF-WITTED, bēēf'wĭt-tĕd. adj. [from beef and wit.] Dull; stupid; heavy-headed.

Beef-witted lord. Shakspeare.

BE'EMOL, bēē'mŏl. n. s. This word I have found only in the example, and know nothing of the etymology, unless it be a corruption of bymodule, from by and modulus, a note; that is, a note out of the regular order.

There be intervenient in the rise of eight, in tones, two beemols, or half notes; so as, if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes. Bacon.

BEEN, bĭn′. [beon, Saxon.] The participle preterite of To BE.

Enough that virtue fill'd the space between,
Prov'd by the ends of being to have been. Pope.

BEER, bēēr. n. s. [bir, Welsh.] Liquor made of malt and hops. It is distiguished from ale, either by being older or smaller.

Try clarifying with almonds in new beer. Bacon.
Flow, Welsted! flow, like thine inspirer, beer;
Tho' stale, not ripe; tho' thin, yet never clear;
So sweetly mawkish, and so smoothly dull;
Heady, not strong; and foaming, tho' not full. Pope.

BE′ESTINGS, bēēs′tingz.[275] See BIESTINGS.

BEET, bēēt. n. s. [beta, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The species are, 1. The common white beet. 2. The common green beet. 3. The common red beet. 4. The turnip-rooted red beet. 5. The great red beet. 6. The yellow beet. 7. The Swiss or Chard beet. Miller.

BE′ETLE, bēē′tl.[405] n. s. [bỳcel, Saxon.]

1. An insect distinguished by having hard cases or sheaths, under which he folds his wings.

They are as shards, and he their beetle. Shaksp.
The poor beetle, that we tread upon,
In corporal suff'rance finds a pang as great,
As when a giant dies. Shakspeare.
Others come sharp of sight, and too provident for that which concerned their own interest; but as blind as beetles in foreseeing this great and common danger. Knolles's History of the Turks.
A grot there was with hoary moss o'ergrown,
The clasping ivies up the ruins creep,
And there the bat and drowsy beetle sleep. Garth.
The butterflies and beetles are such numerous tribes, that, I believe, in our own native country alone, the species of each kind may amount to one hundred and fifty, or more. Ray.

2. A heavy mallet, or wooden hammer, with which wedges are driven, and pavements rammed.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shaksp.
When, by the help of wedges and beetles, an image is cleft out of the trunk of some well-grown tree; yet, after all the skill of artificers to set forth such a divine block, it cannot one moment secure itself from being eaten by worms, or defiled by birds, or cut in pieces by axes. Stillingfleet.

To BE′ETLE, bēē′tl.[405] v. n. [from the noun.] To jut out; to hang over.

What if it tempt you tow'rd the flood, my lord?
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles o'er his base into the sea? Shakspeare.
Or where the hawk
High in the beetling cliff his airy builds? Thomson.

BEETLEBRO′WED, bēēt′tl-brōūd.[362] adj. [from beetle and brow.] Having prominent brows.

Enquire for the beetle-brow'd critic, &c. Swift.

BEETLEHE′ADED, bēē′tl-hĕd-ĕd. adj. [from beetle and head.] Loggerheaded; wooden headed; having a head stupid, like the head of a wooden beetle.

A whoreson, beetleheaded, flap-ear'd knave. Shaks.

BE′ETLESTOCK, bēē′tl-stŏk. n. s. [from beetle and stock.] The handle of a beetle.

BE′ETRAVE, bēēt′rāve. } n. s. A plant.
BE′ETRADISH, bēēt′rād-ĭsh. }

BEEVES, bēēvz. n. s. [The plural of beef.] Black cattle; oxen.

One way, a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground. Milton.
Others make good the paucity of their breed with the length and duration of their days; whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous, first in bisulcous or cloven-hoofed, as camels; and beeves, whereof there is above a million annually slain in England. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
Beeves, at his touch, at once to jelly turn,
And the huge boar is shrunk into an urn. Pope.

To BEFA′LL, bē-fâwl′ v. n. [from fall. It befell, it hath befallen.]

1. To happen to: used generally of ill.

Let me know
The worst that may befall me in this case. Shaksp.
Other doubt possesses me, lest harm
Befall thee, sever'd from me. Milton.
This venerable person, who probably heard our Saviour's prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, drew his congregation out of those unparalleled calamities, which befell his countrymen. Addison.
This disgrace has befallen them, not because they deserved it, but because the people love new faces. Addison.

2. To happen to, as good or neutral.

Bion asked an envious man, that was very sad, what harm had befallen unto him, or what good had befallen unto another man? Bacon.
No man can certainly conclude God's love or hatred to any person, from what befalls him in this world. Tillotson.

3. To happen; to come to pass.

But since th' affairs of men are still uncertain,
Let's reason with the worst that may befall. Shaksp.
I have reveal'd
This discord which befell, and was in heav'n
Among th' angelick pow'rs. Milton.

4. It is used sometimes with to before the person to whom any thing happens; this is rare.

Some great mischief hath befall'n
To that meek man. Paradise Lost.

5. To befall of. To become of; to be the state or condition of: a phrase little used.

Do me the favour to dilate at full
What hath befall'n of them, and thee, till now. Shakspeare.

To BEFI′T, bē-fĭt′. v. a. [from be and fit.] To suit; to be suitable to; to become.

Blind is his love, and best befits the dark. Shaksp.
Out of my sight, thou serpent!—that name best
Befits thee, with him leagued; thyself as false.
Paradise Lost.
I will bring you where she sits,
Clad in splendour, as befits
Her deity. Milton.
Thou, what befits the new lord mayor,
Art anxiously inquisitive to know. Dryden.

To BEFO′OL, bē-fōōl. v. a. [from be and fool.] To infatuate; to fool; to deprive of understanding; to lead into errour.

Men befool themselves infinitely, when, by venting a few sighs, they will needs persuade themselves that they have repented. South.
Jeroboam thought policy the best piety, though in nothing more befooled; the nature of sin being not only to defile, but to infatuate. South.

BEFO′RE, bē-fōre′. prep. [bıꝑoꝛan, Sax.]

1. Farther onward in place.

Their common practice was to look no further before them than the next line; whence it will follow that they can drive to no certain point. Dryden.

2. In front of; not behind.

Who shall go
Before them, in a cloud and pillar of fire,
By day a cloud, by night a pillar of fire,
To guide them in their journey, and remove
Behind them, while the obdurate king pursues. Milt.

3. In the presence of: noting authority or conquest.

Great queen of gathering clouds,
See we fall before thee!
Prostrate we adore thee! Dryden.
The Alps and Pyrenean sink before him. Addison.

4. In the presence of: noting respect.

We see that blushing, and casting down of the eyes, both are more when we come before many. Bacon.
They represent our poet betwixt a farmer and a courtier, when he drest himself in his best habit, to appear before his patron. Dryden.

5. In sight of.

Before the eyes of both our armies here,
Let us not wrangle. Shakspeare.

6. Under the cognizance of: noting jurisdiction.

If a suit be begun before an archdeacon, the ordinary may license the suit to an higher court. Ayliffe.

7. In the power of: noting the right of choice.

The world was all before them, where to chuse
Their place of rest, and Providence their guide. Milt.
Give us this evening; thou hast morn and night,
And all the year, before thee for delight. Dryden.
He hath put us in the hands of our own counsel. Life and death, prosperity and destruction, are before us. Tillotson.

8. By the impulse of something behind.

Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened
With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind.
Shakspeare.
Hurried by fate, he cries, and borne before
A furious wind, we leave the faithful shore. Dryden.

9. Preceding in time.

Particular advantages it has before all the books which have appeared before it in this kind. Dryden.

10. In preference to.

We should not presume to determine which should be the fittest, till we see he hath chosen some one; which one we may then boldly say to be the fittest, because he hath taken it before the rest. Hooker.
We think poverty to be infinitely desirable before the torments of covetousness. Taylor.

11. Prior to; nearer to any thing; as, the eldest son is before the younger in succession.

To beggarly divorcement, love him dearly. Shaksp.

A beggarly account of empty boxes. Shaksp.

Who, that beheld such a bankrupt beggarly fellow as Cromwell entering the parliament house, with a thread-bare, torn cloak, and greasy hat, could have suspected that he should, by the murder of one king and the banishment of another, ascend the throne? South.

The next town has the reputation of being extremely poor and beggarly. Addison.

Corusodes, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty-four pounds out of a beggarly fellowship. Swift.

Be'ggarly, bêg'gûr-lê. adv. [from beggar.] Meanly; despicably; indigently.

Touching God himself, hath he revealed, that it is his delight to dwell beggarly? And that he taketh no pleasure to be worshipped, saving only in poor cottages? Hooker.

Be'ggary, bêg'gûr-ê. n. s. [from beggar.] Indigence; poverty in the utmost degree.

On he brought me into so bare a house, that it was the picture of miserable happiness and rich beggary. Sidney.

While I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say there is no sin but to be rich:
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say there is no vice but beggary. Shaksp.

We must become not only poor for the present, but reduced, by further mortgages, to a state of beggary for endless years to come. Swift.

To BEGI'N, bê-gîn. v. n. I began, or begun; I have begun. [beginnan, Sax. from be, or by to, and ginzan, gaan, or gan, to go.]

1. To enter upon something new: applied to persons.

Begin every day to repent; not that thou shouldst at all defer it; but all that is past ought to seem little to thee, seeing it is so in itself. Begin the next day with the same zeal, fear, and humility, as if thou hadst never begun before. Taylor.

2. To commence any action or state; to do the first act, or first part of an act; to make the first step from not doing to doing.

They began at the ancient men which were before the house. Ezekiel.

By peace we will begin. Shakspeare.

I'll sing of heroes and of kings:
Begin, my muse! Cowley.

Of these no more you hear him speak;
He now begins upon the Greek:
These, rang'd and show'd, shall in their turns
Remain obscure as in their urns. Prior.

Beginning from the rural gods, his hand
Was lib'ral to the pow'rs of high command. Dryd.

Rapt into future times, the bard begun,
A virgin shall conceive. Pope.

3. To enter upon existence; as, the world began; the practice began.

I am as free as Nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran. Dryd.

4. To have its original.

And thus the hard and stubborn race of man
From animated rock and flint began. Blackmore.

From Nimrod first the savage chace began;
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

5. To take rise; to commence.

Judgment must begin at the house of God. 1 Peter.
The song begun from Jove. Dryden.
All began,
All ends, in love of God and love of man. Pope.

6. To come into act.

Now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden.

To BEGI'N, bè-gîn'. v. a.

1. To do the first act of any thing; to pass from not doing to doing, by the first act.

Ye nymphs of Solyma begin the song. Pope.
They have been awaked, by these awful scenes, to begin religion; and, afterwards, their virtue has improved itself into more refined principles, by divine grace. Watts.

2. To trace from any thing, as the first ground.

The apostle begins our knowledge in the creatures, which leads us to the knowledge of God. Locke.

3. To begin with. To enter upon; to fall to work upon.

A lesson which requires so much time to learn, had need be early begun with. Gov. of the Tongue.

BEGI'NNER, bè-gîn'nûr.[96] n. s. [from begin.]

1. He that gives the first cause, or original, to any thing.

Thus heaping crime on crime, and grief on grief,
To loss of love adjoining loss of friend,
I meant to purge both with a third mischief,
And, in my woe's beginner, it to end. Spenser.
Socrates maketh Ignatius, the bishop of Antioch, the first beginner thereof, even under the apostles themselves. Hooker.

2. An unexperienced attempter; one in his rudiments; a young practitioner.

Palladius, behaving himself nothing like a beginner, brought the honour to the Iberian side. Sidney.
They are, to beginners, an easy and familiar introduction; a mighty augmentation of all virtue and knowledge in such as are entered before. Hooker.
I have taken a list of several hundred words in a sermon of a new beginner, which not one hearer could possibly understand. Swift.

BEGI'NNING, bè-gîn'nîng.[410] n. s. [from begin.]

1. The first original or cause.

Wherever we place the beginning of motion, whether from the head or the heart, the body moves and acts by a consent of all its parts. Swift.

2. The entrance into act, or being.

In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. Genesis.

3. The state in which any thing first is.

Youth, what man's age is like to be, doth show;
We may our end by our beginning know. Denham.

4. The rudiments, or first grounds or materials.

By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, art,
Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow:
Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryd.
The understanding is passive; and whether or not it will have these beginnings, and materials of knowledge, is not in its own power. Locke.

5. The first part of any thing.

The causes and designs of an action, are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Broome.

To BEGI'RD, bè-gêrd'.[160] v. a. I begirt, or begirded; I have begirt. [from be and gird.]

1. To bind with a girdle.

2. To surround; to encircle; to encompass.

Begird th' Almighty throne,
Beseeching, or besieging. Milton.
Or should she, confident
As sitting queen adorn'd on beauty's throne,
Descend, with all her winning charms begirt,
T' enamour. Milton.
At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud:
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears;
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.

3. To shut in with a siege; to beleaguer; to block up.

It was so closely begirt before the king's march into the west, that the council humbly desired his majesty, that he would relieve it. Clarendon.

To BEGI'RT, bè-gêrt'.[160] v. a. [This is, I think, only a corruption of begird; perhaps by the printer.] To begird. See BEGIRD.

And, Lentulus, begirt you Pompey's house,
To seize his sons alive; for they are they Must make our peace with him. Ben Jonson.

BE'GLERBEG, bêg'lêr-bêg. n. s. [Turkish.] The chief governour of a province among the Turks.

To BEGNA'W, bè-nâw'. v. a. [from be and gnaw.] To bite; to eat away; to corrode; to nibble.

His horse is stark spoiled with the staggers, begnawn with the bots, waid in the back, and shoulder-shotten. Shakspeare.
The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

BEGO'NE, bè-gôn'. interject. [only a coalition of the words be gone] Go away; hence; haste away.

Begone! the goddess cries with stern disdain,
Begone! nor dare the hallow'd stream to stain.
She fled, for ever banish'd from the train. Addison.

BEGO'T, bè-gôt'. } The participle passive of the verb beget.
BEGO'TTEN, bè-gôt'tn.[103] }

Remember that thou wast begot of them. Ecclus.

But base begotten on a Theban slave. Dryden.

To BEGRE'ASE, bè-grêze'. v. a. [from be and grease.] To soil or daub with unctuous or fat matter.

To BEGRI'ME, bè-grîme'. v. a. [from be and grime. See GRIME and GRIM.] To soil with dirt deep impressed; to soil in such a manner that the natural hue cannot easily be recovered.

Her name, that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd, and black
As my own face. Shakspeare.

To BEGUI'LE, bè-gyîle'.[160] v. a. [from be and guile.]

1. To impose upon; to delude; to cheat.

This I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. Colossians.
The serpent me beguil'd, and I did eat! Milton.
Whosoever sees a man, who would have beguiled and imposed upon him by making him believe a lie, he may truly say, that is the man who would have ruined me. South.

2. To deceive; to evade.

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Tis yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will. Shaksp.

3. To deceive pleasingly; to amuse.

Sweet, leave me here awhile;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakspeare.
With these sometimes she doth her time beguile;
These do by fits her phantasy possess. Sir J. Davies.

BEGU'N, bè-gûn'. The participle passive of begin.

But thou, bright morning star, thou rising sun,
Which in these latter times hast brought to light
Those mysteries, that since the world begun
Lay hid in darkness and eternal night. Sir J. Dav.

BEHA'LF, bè-hâf'.[78 403] n. s. [This word Skinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half; as, for my part. It seems to be rather corrupted from behoof, profit; the pronunciation degenerating easily to behafe; which, in imitation of other words so sounded, was written, by those who knew not the etymology, behalf.]

1. Favour; cause favoured: we say in behalf, but for the sake.

He was in confidence with those who designed the destruction of Strafford; against whom he had contracted some prejudice, in the behalf of his nation. Clarendon.
Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf. Addison.
Never was any nation blessed with more frequent interpositions of divine providence in its behalf.
Atterbury.

2. Vindication; support.

He might, in his presence, defy all Arcadian knights, in the behalf of his mistress's beauty. Sidney.
Lest the fiend,
Or in behalf of man, or to invade
Vacant possession, some new troubles raise. Milton.
Others believe that, by the two Fortunes, were meant prosperity or affliction; and produce, in their behalf, an ancient monument. Addison.

To BEHA'VE, bè-hâve'. v. a. [from be and have.]

1. To carry; to conduct: used almost always with the reciprocal pronoun.

We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you.
Thessalonians.
Manifest signs came from heaven unto those that behaved themselves manfully. 2 Maccabees.
To their wills wedded, to their errours slaves,
No man like them, they think, himself behaves.
Denham.
We so live, and so act, as if we were secure of the final issue and event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of, to govern; to subdue; to discipline: but this is not now used.

But who his limbs with labours, and his mind
Behaves with cares, cannot so easy miss. Fairy Q.
With such sober and unnoted passion
He did behave his anger ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument. Shaksp.

To BEHA'VE, bè-hâve'. v. n. To act; to conduct one's self. It is taken either in a good or a bad sense; as, he behaved well or ill.

BEHA'VIOUR, bè-hâve'yûr.[294] n. s. [from behave.]

1. Manner of behaving one's self, whether good or bad; manners; carriage, with respect to propriety.

Mopsa, curious in any thing but her own good behaviour, followed Zelmane. Sidney.

2. External appearance with respect to grace.

He marked, in Dora's dancing, good grace and handsome behaviour. Sidney.

3. Gesture; manner of action, adapted to particular occasions.

Well witnessing the most submissive behaviour that a thralled heart could express. Sidney.
When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

One man sees how much another man is a fool, when he dedicates his behaviour to love. Shaksp.

And he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands. 1 Samuel.

4. Elegance of manners; gracefulness.

The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

He who adviseth the philosopher, altogether devoted to the Muses, sometimes to offer sacrifice to the altars of the Graces, thought knowledge imperfect without behaviour. Wotton.

5. Conduct; general practice; course of life.

To him, who hath a prospect of the state that attends men after this life, depending on their behaviour here, the measures of good and evil are changed. Locke.

6. To be upon one's behaviour. A familiar phrase, noting such a state as requires great caution; a state in which a failure in behaviour will have bad consequences.

Tyrants themselves are upon their behaviour to a superiour power. L'Estrange.

To BEHE'AD, bē-hēd'. v. a. [from be and head.] To deprive of the head; to kill by cutting off the head.

His beheading he underwent with all christian magnanimity. Clarendon.

On each side they fly,
By chains connext, and, with destructive sweep,
Behead whole troops at once. Philips.

Mary, queen of Scots, was beheaded in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Addison.

BEHE'LD, bē-hēld'. participle passive. from behold; which see.

All hail! ye virgin daughters of the main!
Ye streams, beyond my hopes beheld again! Pope.

BE'HEMOTH, bē'hē-mŏth. n. s. Behemoth, in Hebrew, signifies beasts in general, particularly the larger kind, fit for service. But Job speaks of an animal behemoth, and describes its properties. Bochart has taken much care to make it the hippopotamus, or river horse. Sanctius thinks it is an ox. The Fathers suppose the devil to be meant by it. But we agree with the generality of interpreters, that it is the elephant. Calmet.

Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox. Job.

Behold! in plaited mail
Behemoth rears his head. Thomson.

BE'HEN, bē'hĕn. } n. s. Valerian roots. Also BEN, bĕn. } a fruit resembling the tamarisk, from which perfumers extract an oil. Dict.

BEHE'ST, bē-hĕst'. n. s [from be and hest; hæꝑ, Saxon.] Command; precept; mandate.

Her tender youth had obediently lived under her parents' behests, without framing, out of her own will, the forechoosing of any thing. Sidney.

Such joy he had their stubborn hearts to quell,
And sturdy courage tame with dreadful awe,
That his behest they fear'd as a proud tyrant's law. Spenser.

I, messenger from everlasting Jove,
In his great name thus his behest do tell. Fairfax.

To visit oft those happy tribes,
On high behests his angels to and fro
Pass'd frequent. Milton.

In heav'n God ever blest, and his divine
Behests obey, worthiest to be obey'd! Milton.

To BEHI'GHT, bē-hīte'. v. a. pret. behot, part. behight. [from hatan to promise, Sax.]

6. Remaining after the death of those to whom it belonged.

What he gave me to publish, was but a small part of what he left behind him. Pope.

7. At a distance from something going before.

Such is the swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.

8. Inferiour to another; having the posteriour place with regard to excellence.

After the overthrow of this first house of God, a second was erected; but with so great odds, that they wept, which beheld how much this latter came behind it. Hooker.

9. On the other side of something.

From light retir'd behind his daughter's bed,
He, for approaching sleep, compos'd his head. Dryden.

BEHI'ND, bē-hīnd'. adv.

1. Out of sight; not yet produced to view; remaining.

We cannot be sure that we have all the particulars before us; and that there is no evidence behind, and yet unseen, which may cast the probability on the other side. Locke.

2. Most of the former senses may become adverbial, by suppressing the accusative case; as, I left my money behind or behind me.

BEHI'NDHAND, bē-hīnd'hănd. adv. [from behind and hand.]

1. In a state in which rent or profit, or any advantage, is anticipated, so that less is to be received, or more performed, than the natural or just proportion.

Your trade would suffer, if your being behindhand has made the natural use so high, that your tradesman cannot live upon his labour. Locke.

2. Not upon equal terms, with regard to forwardness. In this sense, it is followed by with.

Consider, whether it is not better to be half a year behindhand with the fashionable part of the world, than to strain beyond his circumstances. Spectator.

3. Shakspeare uses it as an adjective, but licentiously, for backward; tardy.

And these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behindhand slackness. Shakspeare.

To BEHO'LD, bē-hōld'. v. a. pret. I beheld, I have beheld, or beholden. [behealdan, Saxon.] To view; to see; to look upon; to behold is to see, in an emphatical or intensive sense.

Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears. Ezekiel.

When Thessalians on horseback were beheld afar off, while their horses watered, while their heads were depressed, they were conceived by the spectators to be one animal. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes,
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden.

At this the former tale again he told,
With thund'ring tone, and dreadful to behold. Dryd.

The Saviour comes, by ancient bards foretold!
Hear him, ye deaf; and all ye blind, behold! Pope.

BEHO'LD, bē-hōld'. interject. [from the verb.] See; lo: a word by which attention is excited, or admiration noted.

Behold! I am with thee, and will keep thee. Gen.

When out of hope, behold her! not far off,
Such as I saw her in my dream, adorn'd
With what all earth or heaven could bestow,
To make her amiable. Milton.

BEHO'LDEN, bē-hōl'dn.[103] particip. adj. [gehouden, Dutch; that is, held in obligation. It is very corruptly written beholding.] Obliged; bound in gratitude: with the particle to.

Horns, which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for. Shakspeare.

Little are we beholden to your love,
And little look'd for at your helping hands. Shaksp.

I found you next, in respect of bond both of near alliance, and particularly of communication in studies: wherein I must acknowledge myself beholden to you. Bacon.

I think myself mightily beholden to you for the reprehension you then gave us. Addison.

We, who see men under the awe of justice, cannot conceive what savage creatures they would be without it; and how much beholden we are to that wise contrivance. Atterbury.

BEHO'LDER, bē-hōl'dûr. n. s. [from behold.] Spectator; he that looks upon any thing.

Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink? Shaksp.

These beasts among,
Beholders rude, and shallow to discern
Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee? Milton.

Things of wonder give no less delight
To the wise Maker's than beholder's sight. Denham.

The justling chiefs in rude encounters join,
Each fair beholder trembling for her knight. Granv.

The charitable foundations, in the church of Rome, exceed all the demands of charity; and raise envy, rather than compassion, in the breasts of beholders. Atterbury.

BEHO'LDING, bē-hōl'dĭng.[410] adj. [corrupted from beholden.] Obliged. See BEHOLDEN.

BEHO'LDING, bē-hōl'dĭng. n. s. Obligation.

Love to virtue, and not to any particular beholdings, hath expressed this my testimony. Carew.

BEHO'LDINGNESS, bē-hōl'dĭng-nĕs. n. s. [from beholding, mistaken for beholden.] The state of being obliged.

The king invited us to his court, so as I must acknowledge a beholdingness unto him. Sidney

In this my debt I seem'd loth to confess,
In that I shunn'd beholdingness. Donne.

BEHO'OF, bè-hôôf'. n. s. [from behoove.] That which behooves; that which is advantageous; profit; advantage.

Her majesty may alter any thing of those laws, for her own behoof, and for the good of the people. Spenser.

No mean recompence it brings
To your behoof: if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce
To her original darkness, and your sway. Milton.

Wert thou some star, which from the ruin'd roof
Of shak'd Olympus by mischance didst fall;
Which careful Jove, in nature's true behoof,
Took up, and in fit place did reinstate. Milton

Because it was for the behoof of the animal, that, upon any sudden accident, it might be awakened, there were no shuts or stopples made for the ears. Ray.

It would be of no behoof, for the settling of government, unless there were a way taught, how to know the person to whom belonged this power and dominion. Locke.

To BEHO'OVE, bè-hôôve'. v. n. [behoran, Saxon, it is a duty.] To be fit; to be meet: either with respect to duty, necessity, or convenience. It is used only impersonally with it.

For better examination of their quality it behooveth the very foundation and root, the highest well-spring and fountain of them, to be discovered. Hooker.

He did so prudently temper his passions, as that none of them made him wanting in the offices of life, which it behooved or became him to perform. Atterbury.

But should you lure the monarch of the brook,
Behooves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson.

BEHO'OVEFUL, bè-hôôve'fûl. adj. [from behoof.] Useful; profitable; advantageous. This word is somewhat antiquated.

It is very behooveful in this country of Ireland, where there are waste deserts full of grass, that the same should be eaten down. Spenser.

Laws are many times full of imperfections; and that which is supposed behooveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

Madam, we have cull'd such necessaries
As are behooveful for our state to-morrow. Shaksp.

It may be most behooveful for princes in matters of grace, to transact the same publickly: so it is as requisite, in matters of judgment, punishment, and censure, that the same be transacted privately. Clarendon.

BEHO'OVEFULLY, bè-hôôve'fûl-lè. adv. [from behooveful.] Profitably; usefully.

Tell us of more weighty dislikes than these, and that may more behoovefully import the reformation. Spenser.

BEHO'T, bè-hôt'. [preterite, as it seems, of behight, to promise.]

With sharp intended sting so rude him smote,
That to the earth him drove as striken dead,
Ne living wight would have him life behot. Fairy Q.

BE'ING, bè'ing.[410] particip. [from be.]

Those, who have their hope in another life, look upon themselves as being on their passage through this. Atterbury.

BE'ING, bè'ing. n. s.[410] [from be.]

1. Existence: opposed to nonentity.

Of him all things have both received their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are. Hooker.

Yet is not God the author of her ill,
Tho' author of her being, and being there. Davies.

There is none but he,
Whose being I do fear: and under him
My genius is rebuked. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Thee, Father, first they sung, omnipotent,
Immutable, immortal, infinite,
Eternal king! Thee, Author of all being,
Fountain of light! Milton's Par. Lost.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing to be an excellent creation. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Consider every thing as not yet in being; then examine, if it must needs have been at all, or what other ways it might have been. Bentley.

2. A particular state or condition.

Those happy spirits which, ordained by fate,
For future being and new bodies wait. Dryden.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.

As now your own, our beings were of old,
And once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould. Pope.

3. The person existing.

Ah fair, yet false! ah being form'd to cheat
By seeming kindness, mixt with deep deceit! Dryd.

It is folly to seek the approbation of any being, besides the supreme; because no other being can make a right judgment of us, and because we can procure no considerable advantage from the approbation of any other being. Addison's Spectator.

BE'ING, bè'ing. conjunct. [from be.] Since. Dict.

BE IT SO, bè'ît-sô. A phrase of anticipation, suppose it be so; or of permission, let it be so.

My gracious duke,
Be 't so she will not here, before your grace,
Consent to marry with Demetrius,
I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakspeare.

To BELA'BOUR, bè-lâ'bûr. v. a. [from be and labour.] To beat; to thump: a word in low speech.

What several madnesses in men appear!
Orestes runs from fancy'd furies here;
Ajax belabours there an harmless ox,
And thinks that Agamemnon feels the knocks. Dryd.

He sees virago Nell belabour,
With his own staff, his peaceful neighbour. Swift.

To BELA'CE, bè-lâce'. v. a. [a sea term.] To fasten; as, to belace a rope. Dict.

BE'LAMIE, bèl'â-mè. n. s. [bel amie, Fr.] A friend; an intimate. This word is out of use.

To the fair Critias, his dearest belamie. Fairy Q.

BE'LAMOUR, bèl'â-môôr. n. s. [bel amour, Fr.] Gallant; consort; paramour: obsolete.

Lo, lo, how brave she decks her bounteous bow'r
With silken curtains, and gold coverlets,
Therein to shroud her sumptuous belamour. Fairy Q.

BELA'TED, bè-lâ'tèd. adj. [from be and late.] Benighted; out of doors late at night.

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels, by a forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton's Par. Lost.

Or near Fleetditch's oozy brinks,
Belated, seems on watch to lie. Swift.

To BELA'Y, bè-lâ'. v. a. [from be and lay; as, to waylay, to lie in wait, to lay wait for.]

1. To block up; to stop the passage.

The speedy horse all passages belay,
And spur their smoaking steeds to cross their way. Dryden.

2. To place in ambush.

'Gainst such strong castles needeth greater might,
Than those small forces ye were wont belay. Spenser.

To BELAY a rope, bè-lâ'. [a sea term.] To splice; to mend a rope, by laying one end over another.

To BELCH, bêlsh. v. n. [bealcan, Saxon.]

1. To eject the wind from the stomach; to eruct.

The symptoms are, a sour smell in their fæces, belchings, and distensions of the bowels. Arbuthnot.

2. To issue out, as by eructation.

The waters boil, and, belching from below,
Black sands as from a forceful engine throw. Dryd.

A triple pile of plumes his crest adorn'd,
On which with belching flames Chimæra burn'd. Dryden.

To BELCH, bêlsh'. v. a. To throw out from the stomach; to eject from any hollow place. It is a word implying coarseness, hatefulness, or horrour.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and, when they 're full,
They belch us. Shakspeare.

The bitterness of it I now belch from my heart. Shakspeare.

Immediate in a flame,
But soon obscur'd with smoke, all heav'n appear'd,
From those deep-throated engines belch'd. Milton.

The gates that now
Stood open wide, belching outrageous flame
Far into chaos, since the fiend pass'd through. Milton.

Rough as their savage lords who ranged the wood,
And, fat with acorns, belch'd their windy food. Dryd.

There belch'd the mingled streams of wind and blood,
And human flesh, his indigested food. Pope's Odyss.

When I an am'rous kiss design'd,
I belch'd an hurricane of wind. Swift.

BELCH, bêlsh.[352] n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of eructation.

2. A cant term for malt liquor.

A sudden reformation would follow among all sorts of people; porters would no longer be drunk with belch. Dennis.

BE'LDAM, bêl'dâm.[98] n. s. [belle dame, which, in old French, signified probably an old woman, as belle age, old age.]

1. An old woman: generally a term of contempt, marking the last degree of old age, with all its faults and miseries.

Then sing of secret things that came to pass,
When beldam Nature in her cradle was. Milton.

2. A hag.

Why, how now, Hecat? you look angerly.—
—Have I not reason, beldams, as you are,
Saucy and overbold? Shakspeare's Macbeth.

The resty sieve wagg'd ne'er the more;
I weep for woe, the testy beldam swore. Dryden.

To BELE'AGUER, bè-lè'gûr. v. a. [beleggeren, Dutch.] To besiege; to block up a place; to lie before a town.

Their business, which they carry on, is the general concernment of the Trojan camp, then beleaguered by Turnus and the Latins. Dryden.

Against beleaguer'd heav'n the giants move:
Hills pil'd on hills, on mountains mountains lie,
To make their mad approaches to the sky. Dryden.

BELE'AGUERER, bè-lè'gûr-ûr. n. s. [from beleaguer.] One that besieges a place.

To BELEE', bè-lèe'. v. a. [a term in navigation.] To place in a direction unsuitable to the wind.

BELEMNI'TES, bè-lèm'nîtes. n. s. [from βέλος a dart or arrow, because of its resemblance to the point of an arrow.] Arrowhead, or finger-stone, of a whitish and sometimes a gold colour.

BELFLO'WER, bêl'flôûr. n. s. [from bell and flower, because of the shape of its flower; in Latin campanula.] A plant.

There is a vast number of the species of this plant. 1. The tallest pyramidal belflower. 2. The blue peach-leaved belflower. 3. The white peach-leaved belflower. 4. Garden belflower, with oblong leaves and flowers; commonly called Canterbury bells. 5. Canary belflower, with orrach leaves and a tube-rose root. 6. Blue belflower, with edible roots, commonly called rampions. 7. Venus looking glass belflower, &c. Miller.

BELFO'UNDER, bĕl'fŏŭn-dŭr. n.s. [from bell and found.] He whose trade it is to found or cast bells.

Those that make recorders know this, and likewise belfounders in fitting the tune of their bells. Bacon.

BE'LFRY, bĕl'frĕ. n. s. [Beffroy, in French, is a tower; which was perhaps the true word, till those, who knew not its original, corrupted it to belfry, because bells were in it.] The place where the bells are rung.

Fetch the leathern bucket that hangs in the belfry; that is curiously painted before, and will make a figure. Gay.

BELGA'RD,[82] bĕl'gârd. n. s. [belle egard, Fr.] A soft glance; a kind regard: an old word, now wholly disused.

Upon her eyelids many graces sat,
Under the shadow of her even brows,
Working belgards, and amorous retreats. Fairy Q.

To BELI'E, bĕ-lī'. v. a. [from be and lie.]

1. To counterfeit; to feign; to mimick.

Which durst, with horses' hoofs that beat the ground,
And martial brass, belie the thunder's sound. Dryd.
The shape of man, and imitated beast,
The walk, the words, the gesture could supply,
The habit mimick, and the mien belie. Dryden.

2. To give the lie to; to charge with falsehood.

Sure there is none but fears a future state;
And when the most obdurate swear they do not,
Their trembling hearts belie their boastful tongues. Dryden.

Paint, patches, jewels laid aside,
At night astronomers agree,
The evening has the day bely'd
And Phillis is some forty-three. Prior.

3. To calumniate; to raise false reports of any man.

Thou dost belie him, Piercy, thou beliest him;
He never did encounter with Glendower. Shaksp.

4. To give a false representation of any thing.

Uncle, for heav'n's sake, comfortable words,—
—Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts. Shak.
Tuscan Valerus by force o'ercame,
And not bely'd his mighty father's name.
Dryden's Æneid.

In the dispute whate'er I said,
My heart was by my tongue bely'd;
And in my looks you might have read
How much I argued on your side. Prior.

5. To fill with lies. This seems to be its meaning here.

'Tis slander, whose breath
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

BELIE'F, bĕ-lēē'f'. n. s. [from believe.]

1. Credit given to something, which we know not of ourselves, on account of the authority by which it is delivered.

Those comforts that shall never cease,
Future in hope, but present in belief. Wotton.
Faith is a firm belief of the whole word of God, of his gospel, commands, threats, and promises. Wake.

2. The theological virtue of faith, or firm confidence of the truths of religion.

No man can attain belief by the bare contemplation of heaven and earth, for that they neither are sufficient to give us as much as the least spark of light concerning the very principal mysteries of our faith. Hooker.

3. Religion; the body of tenets held by the professors of faith.

In the heat of general persecution, whereunto christian belief was subject upon the first promulgation, it much confirmed the weaker minds, when relation was made how God had been glorified through the sufferings of martyrs. Hooker.

4. Persuasion; opinion.

He can, I know, but doubt to think he will;
Yet hope would fain subscribe, and tempts belief. Milton.

All treaties are grounded upon the belief, that states will be sound in their honour and observance of treaties. Temple.

5. The thing believed; the object of belief.

Superstitious prophecies are not only the belief of fools, but the talk sometimes of wise men. Bacon.

6. Creed; a form containing the articles of faith.

BELI'EVABLE, bĕ-lēē'vâ-bl. adj. [from believe.] Credible; that which may be credited or believed.

1. To credit upon the authority of another, or from some other reason than our personal knowledge.

Adherence to a proposition which they are persuaded, but do not know, to be true, is not seeing, but believing. Locke.

Ten thousand things there are, which we believe merely upon the authority or credit of those who have spoken or written of them. Watt's Logick.

2. To put confidence in the veracity of any one.

The people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever. Exodus.

To BELI'EVE, bĕ-lēēv'. v. n.

1. To have a firm persuasion of any thing.

They may believe that the Lord God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee. Genesis.

2. To exercise the theological virtue of faith.

Now God be prais'd, that to believing souls
Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair. Shaksp.
For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Romans.

3. With the particle in, to hold as an object of faith.

Believe in the Lord your God, so shall you be established. 2 Chron.

4. With the particle on, to trust; to place full confidence in; to rest upon with faith.

To them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. John.

5. I believe, is sometimes used as a way of slightly noting some want of certainty or exactness.

Though they are, I believe, as high as most steeples in England, yet a person, in his drink, fell down, without any other hurt than the breaking of an arm. Addison on Italy.

BELI'EVER, bĕ-lēē'vŭr.[98] n. s. [from believe.]

1. He that believes, or gives credit.

Discipline began to enter into conflict with churches, which, in extremity, had been believers of it. Hooker.

2. A professor of Christianity.

Infidels themselves did discern, in matters of life, when believers did well, when otherwise. Hooker.

If he which writeth do that which is forcible, how should he which readeth be thought to do that, which, in itself, is of no force to work belief, and to save believers? Hooker.

Mysteries held by us have no power, pomp, or wealth, but have been maintained by the universal body of true believers, from the days of the apostles, and will be to the resurrection; neither will the gates of hell prevail against them. Swift.

BELI'EVINGLY, bĕ-lēē'vĭng-lĕ. adv. [from To believe.] After a believing manner.

BELI'KE, bĕ-like'. adv. [from like, as by likelihood.]

1. Probably; likely; perhaps.

There came out of the same woods a horrible foul bear, which fearing, belike, while the lion was present, came furiously towards the place where I was. Sidney.

Lord Angelo, belike, thinking me remiss in my office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on. Shaksp.

Josephus affirmeth, that one of them remained in his time; meaning, belike, some ruin or foundation thereof. Raleigh.

2. It is sometimes used in a sense of irony, as it may be supposed.

We think, belike, that he will accept what the meanest of them would disdain. Hooker.

God appointed the sea to one of them, and the land to the other, because they were so great, that the sea could not hold them both; or else, belike, if the sea had been large enough, we might have gone a fishing for elephants. Brerewood on Languages.

BELI'VE, bĕ-lĭv'. adv. [bilive, Sax: probably from bi and liꝑe, in the sense of vivacity, speed, quickness.] Speedily; quickly; a word out of use.

By that same way the direful dames to drive
Their mournful chariot, fill'd with rusty blood,
And down to Pluto's house are come belive. Fairy Queen.

BELL, bĕll. n. s. [bel, Sax. supposed, by Skinner, to come from pelvis, Lat. a basin. See BALL.]

1. A vessel or hollow body of cast metal, formed to make a noise by the act of a clapper, hammer, or some other instrument striking against it. Bells are in the towers of churches, to call the congregation together.

Your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you to hear with reverence. Shaksp.
Get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thy ear,
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead. Shaksp.
Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder.
He has no one necessary attention to any thing but the bell, which calls to prayers twice a-day. Addison, Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing in the form of a bell, as the cups of flowers.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shaksp. Tempest.
The humming bees, that hunt the golden dew,
In summer's heat on tops of lilies feed,
And creep within their bells to suck the balmy seed. Dryden.

3. A small hollow globe of metal perforated, and containing in it a solid ball; which, when it is shaken, by bounding against the sides, gives a sound.

As the ox hath his yoke, the horse his curb, and the faulcon his bells, so hath man his desires. Shaks.

4. To bear the bell. To be the first; from the wether, that carries a bell among the sheep, or the first horse of a drove that has bells on his collar.

The Italians have carried away the bell from all other nations, as may appear both by their books and works. Hakewill.

5. To shake the bells. A phrase in Shakspeare, taken from the bells of a hawk.

Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,
The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,
Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shakes his bells.
Shaksp.

To BELL, bêll. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow in buds or flowers, in the form of a bell.

Hops, in the beginning of August, bell, and are sometimes ripe. Mortimer.

BELL-FASHIONED, bêll'fâsh-ûnd. adj. [from bell and fashion.] Having the form of a bell; campaniform.

The thorn-apple rises with a strong round stalk, having large bell-fashioned flowers at the joints. Mortimer.

BELLE, bêll. n. s. [beau, belle, Fr.] A young lady.

What motive could compel
A well-bred lord t' assault a gentle belle?
O say, what stranger cause, yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope.

BELLES LETTRES, bêl-lâ'tûr. n. s. [Fr.] Polite literature. It has no singular.

The exactness of the other, is to admit of something like discourse, especially in what regards the belles-lettres. Tatler.

To BE'LLOW, bêl'lô.[327] v. n. [bellan, Sax.]

1. To make a noise as a bull.

Jupiter became a bull, and bellowed; the green
Neptune a ram, and bleated. Shaksp.
What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat,
Within the lion's den. Dryd.
But now the husband of a herd must be
Thy mate, and bellowing sons thy progeny. Dryd.

2. To make any violent outcry.

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,
As he'd burst heav'n. Shaksp.

3. To vociferate; to clamour. In this sense it is a word of contempt.

The dull fat captain, with a hound's deep throat,
Would bellow out a laugh in a base note. Dryden.
This gentleman is accustomed to roar and bellow so terribly loud, that he frightens us. Tatler.

4. To roar as the sea in a storm, or as the wind; to make any continued noise, that may cause terrour.

Till, at the last, he heard a dread sound,
Which thro' the wood loud bellowing did rebound.
Spenser.
The rising rivers float the nether ground;
And rocks the bellowing voice of boiling seas rebound. Dryden.

BE'LLOWS, bêl'lûs. n. s. [bilig, Sax. perhaps it is corrupted from bellies, the wind being contained in the hollow or belly. It has no singular; for we usually say, a pair of bellows; but Dryden has used bellows as a singular.]

1. The instrument used to blow the fire.

Since sighs into my inward furnace turn'd,
For bellows serve to kindle more the fire. Sidney.
One, with great bellows, gather'd filling air,
And with forc'd wind the fuel did enflame.
Fairy Queen.
The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryd.
The lungs, as bellows, supply a force of breath; and the aspera arteria is as the nose of bellows, to collect and convey the breath. Holder.

2. In the following passage it is singular.

Thou neither like a bellows, swell'st thy face,
As if thou wert to blow the burning mass
Of melting ore. Dryden.

BE'LLUINE, bêl'lû-îne.[149] adj. [belluinus, Lat.] Beastly; belonging to a beast; savage; brutal.

If human actions were not to be judged, men would have no advantage over beasts. At this rate, the animal and belluine life would be the best. Atterbury.

BE'LLY, bêl'lê.[182] n. s. [balg, Dutch; bol, bola, Welsh.]

1. That part of the human body which reaches from the breast to the thighs, containing the bowels.

The body's members
Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it;—
That only like a gulf it did remain,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest. Shakspeare.

2. In beasts, it is used, in general, for that part of the body next the ground.

And the Lord said unto the serpent, Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat, all the days of thy life. Genesis.

3. The womb: in this sense, it is commonly used ludicrously or familiarly.

I shall answer that better, than you can the getting up of the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you. Shakspeare.
The secret is grown too big for the pretence, like Mrs. Primly's big belly. Congreve.

4. That part of man which requires food, in opposition to the back, or that which demands clothes.

They were content with a licentious life, wherein they might fill their bellies by spoil, rather than by labour. Hayward.
Whose god is their belly. Phil.
He that sows his grain upon marble, will have many a hungry belly before harvest. Arbuthnot.

5. The part of any thing that swells out into a larger capacity.

Fortune sometimes turneth the handle of the bottle, which is easy to be taken hold of; and after the belly, which is hard to grasp. Bacon.
An Irish harp hath the concave, or belly, not along the strings, but at the end of the strings. Bacon.

6. Any place in which something is inclosed

Out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardst my voice. Jonah

To BE'LLY, bêl'lê. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell into a larger capacity; to hang out; to bulge out.

Thus by degrees day wastes, signs cease to rise,
For bellying earth, still rising up, denies
Their light a passage, and confines our eyes.
Creech's Manilius.

The pow'r appeas'd, with winds suffic'd the sail,
The bellying canvas strutted with the gale. Dryd.
Loud rattling shakes the mountains and the plain,
Heav'n bellies downwards, and descends in rain.
Dryden.
'Midst these disports, forget they not to drench
Themselves with bellying goblets. Philips.

To BEMO'NSTER, bė-mōns'tůr. v. a. [from be and monster.] To make monstrous.

Thou chang'd and self-converted thing! for shame,
Bemonster not thy feature. Shaksp.

BEMU'SED, bė-můzd'.[359] adj. [from To muse.] Overcome with musing; dreaming: a word of contempt.

Is there a parson much bemus'd in beer,
A maudlin poetess, a rhiming peer? Pope.

BENCH, bėnsh.[352] n. s. [benc, Sax. banc, Fr.]

1. A seat, distinguished from a stool by its greater length.

The seats and benches shone of ivory,
An hundred nymphs sat side by side about. Spenser.

All Rome is pleas'd when Statius will rehearse,
And longing crowds expect the promis'd verse;
His lofty numbers with so great a gust
They hear, and swallow with such eager lust:
But while the common suffrage crown'd his cause,
And broke the benches with their loud applause,
His muse had starv'd, had not a piece unread,
And by a player bought, supply'd her bread. Dryd.

2. A seat of justice; the seat where judges sit.

To pluck down justice from your awful bench;
To trip the course of law. Shaksp.

Cyriac, whose grandsire on the royal bench
Of British Themis, with no mean applause,
Pronounc'd, and in his volumes taught our laws,
Which others at their bar so often wrench. Milton.

3. The persons sitting on a bench: as, the whole bench voted the same way.

Fools to popular praise aspire
Of publick speeches, which worse fools admire;
While, from both benches, with redoubled sounds,
Th' applause of lords and commoners abounds. Dryd.

To BENCH, bėnsh.[352] v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with benches.

'Twas bench'd with turf, and goodly to be seen,
The thick young grass arose in fresher green. Dryd.

2. To seat upon a bench.

His cupbearer, whom I from meaner form
Have bench'd and rear'd to worship. Shaksp.

BE'NCHER, bėn'shůr.[98] n. s. [from bench.] Those gentlemen of the inns of court are called benchers, who have been readers; they being admitted to plead within the bar, are also called inner barristers. The benchers, being the seniors of the house, are intrusted with its government and direction, and out of them is a treasurer yearly chosen. Blount. Chambers.

I was taking a walk in the gardens of Lincoln's Inn; a favour that is indulged me by several benchers, who are grown old with me. Tatler.

To BEND, bĕnd. v. n.

1. To be incurvated.
2. To lean or jut over.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully on the confined deep. Shaksp.

3. To resolve; to determine: in this sense the participle is commonly used.

Not so, for once, indulg'd they sweep the main,
Deaf to the call, or, hearing, hear in vain;
But, bent on mischief, bear the waves before. Dryd.
While good, and anxious for his friend,
He's still severely bent against himself;
Renouncing sleep, and rest, and food, and ease.
Addison.
A state of slavery, which they are bent upon with so much eagerness and obstinacy. Addison.
He is every where bent on instruction, and avoids all manner of digressions. Addison.

4. To be submissive: to bow.

The sons of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee. Isaiah.

BEND, bĕnd'. n. s. [from To bend.]

1. Flexure; incurvation.

'Tis true, this god did shake;
His coward lips did from their colour fly;
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the world,
Did lose its lustre. Shakspeare.

2. The crooked timbers which make the ribs or sides of a ship. Skinner.
3. [With heralds.] One of the eight honourable ordinaries, containing a fifth when uncharged; but, when charged, a third part of the escutcheon. It is made by two lines, drawn thwartways from the dexter chief to the sinister base point. Harris.

It is not a small thing won in physick, if you can make rhubarb, and other medicines that are benedict, as strong purgers as those that are not without some malignity. Bacon.

BENEDI'CTION, bĕn-ĕ-dĭk'shŭn. n. s. [benedictio, Lat.]

1. Blessing; a decretory pronunciation of happiness.

A sov'reign shame so bows him; his unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his doghearted daughters. Shakspeare.
From him will raise
A mighty nation; and upon him show'r
His benediction so, that, in his seed,
All nations shall be blest. Milton.

2. The advantage conferred by blessing.

Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New; which carrieth the greater benediction, and the clearer revelation of God's favour. Bacon.

3. Acknowledgments for blessings received; thanks.

Could he less expect
Than glory and benediction, that is, thanks? Milton.
Such ingenious and industrious persons are delighted in searching out natural rarities; reflecting upon the Creator of them his due praises and benedictions. Ray.

4. The form of instituting an abbot.

What consecration is to a bishop, that benediction is to an abbot; but in a different way: for a bishop is not properly such, till consecration; but an abbot, being elected and confirmed, is properly such before benediction. Ayliffe.

BENEFA'CTION, bĕn-ĕ-făk'shŭn. n. s. [from benefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of conferring a benefit.
2. The benefit conferred: which is the more usual sense.

One part of the benefactions, was the expression of a generous and grateful mind. Atterbury.

BENEFA'CTOR, bĕn-ĕ-făk'tûr.[166] n. s. [from benefacio, Lat.] He that confers a benefit; frequently he that contributes to some publick charity: it is used with of, but oftener with to, before the person benefited.

Then swell with pride, and must be titled gods,
Great benefactors of mankind, deliverers,
Worship'd with temple, priest, and sacrifice. Milton.
From that preface he took his hint, though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor. Dryd.
I cannot but look upon the writer as my benefactor, if he conveys to me an improvement of my understanding. Addison.

BENEFI'CIALNESS, bĕn-ē-fĭsh'ăl-nĕs. n. s. [from beneficial.] Usefulness; profit; helpfulness.

Though the knowledge of these objects be commendable for their contentation and curiosity, yet they do not commend their knowledge to us, upon the account of their usefulness and beneficialness. Hale.

BENEFI'CIARY, bĕn-ē-fĭsh'ă-yrē.[113] adj. [from benefice.] Holding something in subordination to another; having a dependent and secondary possession, without sovereign power.

The duke of Parma was tempted by no less promise, than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the pope. Bacon.

BENEFI'CIARY, bĕn-ē-fĭsh'yâ-rē.[113] n. s. He that is in possession of a benefice.

A benefice is either said to be a benefice with the cure of souls, or otherwise. In the first case, if it be annexed to another benefice, the beneficiary is obliged to serve the parish church in his own proper person. Ayliffe.

BE'NEFIT, bĕn'ē-fĭt. n. s. [beneficium, Lat.]

1. A kindness; a favour conferred; an act of love.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms. Shakspeare.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. Psalms.

Offer'd life
Neglect not, and the benefit embrace
By faith, not void of works. Milton.

2. Advantage; profit; use.

The creature abated his strength for the benefit of such as put their trust in thee. Wisdom.

3. In law.

Benefit of clergy is an ancient liberty of the church. When a priest, or one within orders, is arraigned of felony before a secular judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, pray to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected to him: and this might be done in case of murder. The ancient law, in this point of clergy, is much altered; for clerks are no more delivered to their ordinaries to be purged, but now every man, though not within orders, is put to read at the bar, being found guilty, and convicted of such felony as this benefit is granted for; and so burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner, or deputy, standing by, do say, Legit ut clericus; or, otherwise, suffereth death for his transgression. Cowell.

To BE'NEFIT, bĕn'ē-fĭt. v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.

What course I mean to hold,
Shall nothing benefit your knowledge. Shakspeare.

He was so far from benefiting trade, that he did it a great injury, and brought Rome in danger of a famine. Arbuthnot.

To BE'NEFIT, bĕn'ē-fĭt. v. n. To gain advantage; to make improvement.

To tell you therefore what I have benefited herein, among old renowned authors, I shall spare. Milton.

BENE'MPT, bē-nĕmt'. adj. [See NEMPT.] Named; marked out: an obsolete word.

Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gain,
Than kid or coffer, which I thee benempt;
Then up, I say. Spenser.

To BENE'T, bē-nĕt'. v. a. [from net.] To ensnare; to surround as with toils.

Being thus benetted round with villains,
Ere I could mark the prologue, to my bane
They had begun the play. Shakspeare.

BENE'VOLENCE, bē-nĕv'vō-lĕnse. n. s. [benevolentia, Lat.]

To BENI'GHT, bē-nīte'. v. a. [from night.]

1. To involve in darkness; to darken; to shrowd with the shades of night.

He that has light within his own clear breast
May sit i' th' centre, and enjoy bright day;
But he that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts,
Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;
Himself is his own dungeon. Milton.

Those bright stars that did adorn our hemisphere,
as those dark shades that did benight it vanish.
Boyle.

A storm begins, the raging waves run high,
The clouds look heavy, and benight the sky. Garth.

The miserable race of men, that live
Benighted half the year, benumm'd with frosts,
Under the polar Bear. Philips.

2. To surprise with the coming on of night.

Being benighted, the sight of a candle, I saw a good way off, directed me to a young shepherd's house. Sidney.

Here some benighted angel, in his way,
Might ease his wings; and, seeing heav'n appear
In its best work of mercy, think it there. Dryden.

3. To debar from intellectual light; to cloud with ignorance.

But what so long in vain, and yet unknown
By poor mankind's benighted wit, is sought,
Shall in this age to Britain first be shown. Dryden.

BENI'GN, bē-nīne'.[385] adj. [benignus, Lat. It is pronounced without the g, as if written benine; but the g is preserved in benignity.]

1. Kind; generous; liberal; actually good. See BENEFICENT.

This turn hath made amends! Thou hast fulfill'd
Thy words, Creator, bounteous and benign!
Giver of all things fair. Milton.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign. Milton.

We owe more to heav'n than to the sword.
The wish'd return of so benign a lord. Waller.

What heav'n bestows upon the earth, in kind influences and benign aspects, is paid it back in sacrifice and adoration. South.

They who delight in the suffering of inferior creatures, will not be very compassionate or benign. Locke.

Diff'rent are thy names,
As thy kind hand has founded many cities,
Or dealt benign thy various gifts to men. Prior.

2. Wholesome; not malignant.

These salts are of a benign mild nature, in healthy persons; but in others, retain their original qualities, which they discover in cachexies. Arbuthnot.

BENIGN Disease, bē-nīne'. is when all the usual symptoms appear in the small-pox, or any acute disease, favourably, and without any irregularities, or unexpected changes. Quincy.

BENI'GNITY, bē-nĭg'nē-tē. n. s. [from benign.]

1. Graciousness; goodness.

Although he enjoys the good that is done him, he is unconcerned to value the benignity of him that does it. South.

2. Actual kindness.

He which useth the benefit of any special benignity, may enjoy it with good conscience. Hooker.

The king was desirous to establish peace rather by benignity than blood. Hayward.

3. Salubrity; wholesome quality; friendliness to vital nature.

Bones receive a quicker agglutination in sanguine than in cholerick bodies, by reason of the benignity of the serum, which sendeth out better matter for a callus. Wiseman.

BENI'GNLY, bē-nīne'lē. adv. [from benign.] Favourably; kindly; graciously.

'Tis amazement, more than love,
Which her radiant eyes do move;
If less splendour wait on thine,
Yet they so benignly shine,
I would turn my dazzled sight
To behold their milder light. Waller.

Oh, truly good, and truly great!
For glorious as he rose, benignly so he set. Prior.

BE'NISON, bĕn'nē-zn.[170 413] n. s. [benir to bless; benissons, Fr.] Blessing; benediction: not now used, unless ludicrously.

We have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
That face of hers again; therefore, begone
Without our grace, our love, our benison. Shaksp.

Unmuffle, ye fair stars, and thou fair moon,
That wont'st to love the traveller's benison. Milton.

BE'NNET, bĕn'nĕt.[99] n. s. An herb; the same with avens.

BENT, bĕnt. n. s. [from the verb To bend.]

1. The state of being bent; a state of flexure; curvity.

Strike gently, and hold your rod at a bent a little. Walton.

2. Degree of flexure.

There are divers subtle inquiries concerning the strength required to the bending of bows; the force they have in the discharge, according to the several bents; and the strength required to be in the string of them. Wilkins.

3. Declivity.

A mountain stood,
Threat'ning from high, and overlook'd the wood;
Beneath the low'ring brow, and on a bent,
The temple stood of Mars armipotent. Dryden.

4. Utmost power, as of a bent bow.

Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent. Shakspeare.

We both obey,
And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,
To lay our service freely at your feet. Shakspeare.

5. Application of the mind; strain of the mental powers.

The understanding should be brought to the knotty parts of knowledge, that try the strength of thought, and a full bent of the mind, by insensible degrees. Locke.

6. Inclination; disposition towards something.

O who does know the bent of women's fantasy! Spenser.

To your own bents dispose you; you'll be found,
Be you beneath the sky. Shakspeare.

He knew the strong bent of the country towards the house of York. Bacon.

Soon inclin'd t' admit delight,
The bent of nature! Milton.

The golden age was first; when man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted reason knew;
And, with a native bent, did good pursue. Dryden.

Let there be propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry. South.

'Tis odds but the scale turns at last on nature's side, and the evidence of one or two senses gives way to the united bent and tendency of all the five. Atterbury.

7. Determination; fixed purpose.

Their unbelief we may not impute unto insufficiency in the mean which is used, but to the wilful bent of their obstinate hearts against it. Hooker.

Yet we saw them forced to give way to the bent and current humour of the people, in favour of their ancient and lawful government. Temple.

8. Turn of the temper, or disposition: shape, or fashion, superinduced by art.

Not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad of the thing they scowl at. Shakspeare.

Two of them have the very bent of honour. Shaksp.

Then thy straight rule set virtue in my sight,
The crooked line reforming by the right;
My reason took the bent of thy command,
Was form'd and polish'd by thy skilful hand. Dryd.

9. Tendency; flexion; particular direction.

The exercising the understanding in the several ways of reasoning, teacheth the mind suppleness, to apply itself more dexterously to bents and turns of the matter, in all its researches. Locke.

10. A stalk of grass, called bent-grass.

His spear, a bent both stiff and strong,
And well near of two inches long;
The pile was of a horse-fly's tongue,
Whose sharpness nought reversed. Drayt. Nymph.

Then the flowers of the vines; it is a little dust, like the dust of a bent, which grows upon the cluster, in the first coming forth. Bacon's Essays.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass-green, upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair. Peacham.

BE'NTING Time, bĕn'tĭng-time. [from bent.] The time when pigeons feed on bents before peas are ripe.

Bare benting times, and moulting months, may come,
When, lagging late, they cannot reach their home. Dryden.

That no man go beyond, and defraud his brother in any matter. 1 Thess. iv. 6.

BE'ZEL, BE'ZIL, bé'zl. n. s. That part of a ring in which the stone is fixed.

BE'ZOAR, bé'zôre. n.s. [from ƿa against, and zahar poison, Persick.] A stone, formerly in high esteem as an antidote, and brought from the East Indies, where it is said to be found in the dung of an animal called ƿazan; the stone being formed in its belly, and growing to the size of an acorn, and sometimes to that of a pigeon's egg. Its formation is now supposed to be fabulous. The name is applied to several chymical compositions, designed for antidotes; as mineral, solar, and jovial bezoars. Sav. Chamb.

BEZOA'RDICK, bêz-ô-âr'dik. adj. [from bezoar.] Medicines compounded with bezoar.

The bezoardicks are necessary to promote sweat, and drive forth the putrified particles. Floyer.

BIA'NGULATED, bi-âng'gû-lâ-têd. adj.
BIA'NGULOUS, bi-âng'gû-lûs.[116] [from binus and angulus, Lat.] Having two corners or angles. Dict.

BI'AS, bi'âs.[88] n. s. [biais, Fr. said to come from bihay, an old Gaulish word, signifying cross or thwart.]

1. The weight lodged on one side of a bowl, which turns it from the straight line.

Madam, we'll play at bowls———
—'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,
And that my fortune runs against the bias. Shaksp.

2. Any thing which turns a man to a particular course, or gives the direction to his measures.

You have been mistook:
But nature to her bias drew in that. Shakspeare.
This is that boasted bias of thy mind,
By which one way to dulness 'tis inclin'd. Dryden.
Morality influences men's lives, and gives a bias to all their actions. Locke.
Wit and humour, that expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions. Raillery, under such regulations, unbends the mind from severer contemplations, without throwing it off from its proper bias. Addison.
Thus nature gives us, let it check our pride,
The virtue nearest to our vice ally'd;
Reason the bias turns to good or ill. Pope.

3. Propension; inclination.

As for the religion of our poet, he seems to have some little bias towards the opinions of Wickliff. Dryden.

To BI'AS, bi'âs.[88] v. a. [from the noun.] To incline to some side; to balance one way; to prejudice.

Were I in no more danger to be misled by ignorance, than I am to be biassed by interest, I might give a very perfect account. Locke

A desire leaning to either side, biasses the judgment strangely; by indifference for every thing but truth, you will be excited to examine. Watts.

BI'AS, bi'âs. adv. It seems to be used adverbially in the following passage, conformably to the French mettre une chose de biais, to give any thing a wrong interpretation.

Every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim. Shaksp.

In the following passage it seems to be an adjective. Swelled, as the bowl on the biassed side. This is not used.

Blow till thy bias cheek
Outswell the cholic of puft Aquilon. Shakspeare.

BIB, bîb. n. s. A small piece of linen put upon the breasts of children over their clothes.

I would fain know, why it should not be as noble a task to write upon a bib and hanging-sleeves, as on the bulla and prætexta. Addison.

To BIB, bîb. v. n. [bibo, Lat.] To tipple; to sip; to drink frequently.

He playeth with bibbing mother Meroe, as though so named, because she would drink mere wine without water. Camden.

To appease a froward child, they gave him drink as often as he cried; so that he was constantly bibbing, and drank more in twenty-four hours than I did. Locke.

BIBA'CIOUS, bi-bâ'shûs.[118] adj. [bibax, Lat.] Addicted to drinking. Dict.

BIBA'CITY, bi-bâs'sè-tè. n. s. [bibacitas, Lat.] The quality of drinking much.

BI'BLE, bi'bl.[405] n. s. [from βιβλιον a book; called, by way of excellence, The Book.] The sacred volume in which are contained the revelations of God.

If we pass from the apostolick to the next ages of the church, the primitive christians looked on their bibles as their most important treasure.
Government of the Tongue.

We must take heed how we accustom ourselves to a slight and irreverent use of the name of God, and of the phrases and expressions of the holy bible, which ought not to be applied upon every slight occasion. Tillotson.

In questions of natural religion, we should confirm and improve, or connect our reasonings by the divine assistance of the bible. Watts.

BIBLIO'GRAPHER, bîb-lè-ôg'grâ-fûr. n. s. [from βιβλος, and γραφω to write.] A man skilled in literary history, and in the knowledge of books; a transcriber. Dict.

BIBLIOTHE'CAL, bîb-lè-ôth'è-kâl. adj. [from bibliotheca, Lat.] Belonging to a library. Dict.

BI'BULOUS, bîb'ù-lûs.[314] adj. [bibulus, Lat.] That which has the quality of drinking moisture; spungy.

Strow'd bibulous above, I see the sands,
The pebbly gravel next, and gutter'd rocks. Thoms.

BICA'PSULAR, bi-kâp'shù-lâr.[118 552] adj. [bicapsularis, Lat.] Having the seed vessel divided into two parts.

BICE, bise. n. s. The name of a colour used in painting. It is either green or blue.

Take green bice, and order it as you do your blue bice; you may diaper upon it with the water of deep green. Peacham.

BICI'PITAL, bi-sîp'è-tâl.[118] } adj. [biceps,
BICI'PITOUS, bi-sîp'è-tûs. } bicipitis, Lat.]

While men believe bicipitous conformation in any species, they admit a gemination of principal parts. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. It is applied to one of the muscles of the arm.

A piece of flesh it exchanged from the bicipital muscle, of either party's arm. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To BI'CKER, bîk'kûr.[98] v. n. [bicre, Welsh, a contest.]

1. To skirmish; to fight without a set battle; to fight off and on.

They fell to such a bickering, that he got a halting, and lost his picture. Sidney.

In thy face
I see thy fury; if I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings. Shakspeare.

2. To quiver; to play backward and forward.

And from about him fierce effusion rowl'd
Of smoke, and bickering flame, and sparkles dire. Milton.

An icy gale, oft shifting o'er the pool,
Breathes a blue film, and, in its mid career,
Arrests the bickering stream. Thomson.

BI'CKERER, bîk'ûr-ûr.[555] n. s. [from the verb.] A skirmisher.

BI'CKERN, bîk'kûrn.[98 418] n. s. [apparently corrupted from beakiron.] An iron ending in a point.

A blacksmith's anvil is sometimes made with a pike, or bickern, or beakiron, at one end. Moxon.

BICO'RNE, bi'kôrn.[118] } adj. [bicornis,
BICO'RNOUS, bi-kôr'nûs. } Lat.] Having two horns.

We should be too critical, to question the letter Y, or bicornous element of Pythagoras; that is, the making of the horns equal. Brown's Vulg. Err.

BICO'RPORAL, bi-kôr'pò-râl.[118] adj. [bicorpor, Lat.] Having two bodies.

To BID, bîd'. v. a. pret. I bid, bad, bade, I have bid, or bidden, [bîddan, Saxon.]

1. To desire; to ask; to call; to invite.

I am bid forth to supper, Jessica;
There are my keys. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

Go ye into the highways, and, as many as you shall find, bid to the marriage. Matt. xxii. 9.

We ought, when we are bidden to great feasts and meetings, to be prepared beforehand. Hakewill.

2. To command; to order: before things or persons.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,
He met the nightmare, and her nine fold,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shakspeare.

He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him. Shakspeare.

Haste to the house of sleep, and bid the god,
Who rules the nightly visions with a nod,
Prepare a dream. Dryden's Fables.

Curse on the tongue that bids this general joy.
—Can they be friends of Antony, who revel
When Antony's in danger? Dryd. All for Love.

Thames heard the numbers, as he flow'd along,
And bade his willows learn the moving song. Pope.

Acquire a government over your ideas, that they may come when they are called, and depart when they are bidden. Watts.

3. To offer; to propose; as, to bid a price.

Come, and be true.——
—Thou bidst me to my loss; for true to thee
Were to prove false. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

When a man is resolute to keep his sins while he lives, and yet unwilling to relinquish all hope, he will embrace that profession which bids fairest to the reconciling those so distant interests. Decay of Piety.

As when the goddesses came down of old,
With gifts their young Dardanian judge they try'd,
And each bade high to win him to their side. Granv.

To give interest a share in friendship, is to sell it by inch of candle; he that bids most shall have it: and when it is mercenary, there is no depending on it. Collier on Friendship.

4. To proclaim; to offer or to make known by some public voice.

Our bans thrice bid! and for our wedding day
My kerchief bought! then press'd, then forc'd away. Gay.

5. To pronounce; to declare.

You are retir'd
As if you were a feasted one, and not
The hostess of the meeting; pray you bid
These unknown friends to 's welcome. Shakspeare.

Divers, as we passed by them, put their arms a little abroad; which is their gesture, when they bid any welcome. Bacon.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, sore repuls'd,
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions?
A. Philips.

6. To denounce.

Thyself and Oxford, with five thousand men,
Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

She bid war to all that durst supply
The place of those her cruelty made die. Waller.

The captive cannibal, opprest with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping crowd,
And, spent at last and speechless as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies.
Granville.

7. To pray. See BEAD.

If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. John.

When they desired him to tarry longer with them, he consented not, but bade them farewell. Acts.

8. To bid beads, is to distinguish each bead by a prayer.

By some haycock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his beads both even song and morn. Dryd.

BI'DALE, bîd'âl. n. s. [from bid and ale.] An invitation of friends to drink at a poor man's house, and there to contribute charity. Dict.

There were two of our company bidden to a feast of the family. Bacon.

Madam, the bidden guests are come. A. Philips.

2. Commanded.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul,
Instruct the eyes of young coquettes to roll,
Teach infants' cheeks a bidden blush to know,
And little hearts to flutter at a beau. Pope.

BI'DDER, bîd'dûr.[98] n. s. [from To bid.] One who offers or proposes a price.

He looked upon several dresses which hung there, exposed to the purchase of the best bidder. Addison.

BI'DDING, bîd'dîng.[410] n. s. [from bid] Command; order.

How say'st thou, that Macduff denies his person
At our great bidding. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

At his second bidding, darkness fled,
Light shone, and order from disorder sprung. Milt.

To BIDE, bide. v. a. [bîdan, Saxon.] To endure; to suffer: commonly to abide.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm! Shaksp.

The wary Dutch this gathering storm foresaw,
And durst not bide it on the English coast. Dryden.

To BIDE, bide. v. n.

1. To dwell; to live; to inhabit.

All knees to thee shall bow, of them that bide
In heav'n or earth, or under earth in hell. Milton.

2. To remain in a place.

Safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head,
The least a death to nature. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

3. To continue in a state.

And they also, if they bide not still in unbelief, shall be graffed in. Romans, xi. 23.

4. It has probably all the significations of the word abide; which see: but it being grown somewhat obsolete, the examples of its various meanings are not easily found.

BIDE'NTAL, bi-dēn'tăl.[118] adj. [bidens, Lat.] Having two teeth.

Ill management of forks is not to be helped, when they are only bidental. Swift.

BI'DING, bī'dĭng.[410] n. s. [from bide.] Residence; habitation.

BIFO'LD, bī'fōld. adj. [from binus, Lat. and fold.] Twofold; double.

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;
If souls guide vows, if vows are sanctimony,
If sanctimony be the gods' delight,
If there be rule in unity itself,
This is not she: O madness of discourse!
This cause sets up with and against thyself!
Bifold authority. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

BI'FORMED, bī'fōrmd.[362] adj. [biformis,] Lat.] Compounded of two forms, or bodies.

BIFU'RCATED, bī-fŭr'kā-tĕd.[118] adj. [from binus two, and furca a fork, Lat.] Shooting out, by a division, into two heads.

A small white piece, bifurcated, or branching into two, and finely reticulated all over. Woodward.

BIFURCA'TION, bī-fŭr-kā'shŭn. n. s. [from binus and furca, Lat.] Division into two; opening into two parts.

The first catachrestical and far derived similitude, it holds with man; that is, in a bifurcation, or division of the root into two parts. Brown's Vulg. Err.

BIG, bĭg'. adj. [This word is of uncertain or unknown etymology. Junius derives it from βαγαι☞; Skinner from bug, which, in Danish, signifies the belly.]

1. Having comparative bulk, greater or less.

A troubled ocean, to a man who sails in it, is, I think, the biggest object that he can see in motion. Spectator.

2. Great in bulk; large.

Both in addition and division, either of space or duration, when the idea under consideration becomes very big, or very small, its precise bulk becomes obscure and confused. Locke.

3. Teeming; pregnant; great with young: with the particle with.

A bear big with young hath seldom been seen. Bacon.

Lately on yonder swelling bush,
Big with many a common rose,
This early bud began to blush. Waller.

4. Sometimes with of, but rarely.

His gentle lady,
Big of this gentleman, our theme, deceas'd
As he was born. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

5. Full of something; and desirous, or about, to give it vent.

The great, th' important day,
Big with the fate of Cato and of Rome. Addison.

Now big with knowledge of approaching woes,
The prince of augurs, Halithreses, rose. Pope.

6. Distended; swoln; ready to burst: used often of the effects of passion, as grief, rage.

Thy heart is big; get thee apart, and weep. Shak.

7. Great in air and mien; proud; swelling; tumid; haughty; surly.

How else, said he, but with a good bold face,
And with big words, and with a stately pace?
Spenser.

To the meaner man, or unknown in the court, seem somewhat solemn, coy, big, and dangerous of look, talk, and answer. Ascham.

If you had look'd big and spit at him, he'd have run. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

In this prosperous season, he fell under the reproach of being a man of big looks, and of a mean and abject spirit. Clarendon.

Or does the man i' th' moon look big,
Or wear a huger periwig
Than our own native lunaticks? Hudibras.

Of governments that once made such a noise, and looked so big in the eyes of mankind, as being founded upon the deepest counsels, and the strongest force; nothing remains of them but a name. South.

Thou thyself, thus insolent in state,
Art but perhaps some country magistrate,
Whose power extends no farther than to speak
Big on the bench, and scanty weights to break.
Dryden.

To grant big Thraso valour, Phormio sense,
Should indignation give, at least offence. Garth.

8. Great in spirit; lofty; brave.

What art thou? have not I
An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?
Thy words, I grant, are bigger: for I wear not
My dagger in my mouth. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

BI'GAMIST, bĭg'gā-mĭst. n. s. [bigamus, low Lat.] One that has committed bigamy. See BIGAMY.

By the papal canons, a clergyman, that has a wife, cannot have an ecclesiastical benefice; much less can a bigamist have such a benefice according to that law. Ayliffe.

BI'GAMY, bĭg'gā-mē.[535 503] n. s. [bigamia, low Latin.]

1. The crime of having two wives at once.

A beauty-waining and distressed widow
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all my thoughts
To base declension, and loath'd bigamy. Shakspeare.

Randal determined to commence a suit against Martin for bigamy and incest. Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. [In the canon law.] The marriage of a second wife, or of a widow, or a woman already debauched; which, in the church of Rome, were considered as bringing a man under some incapacities for ecclesiastical offices.

BIGBE'LLIED, bĭg'bĕl-lĭd.[282] adj. [from big and belly.] Pregnant; with child; great with young.

When we have laugh'd to see the sails conceive,
And grow bigbellied with the wanton wind. Shaksp.

Children and bigbellied women require antidotes somewhat more grateful to the palate. Harvey.

So many well-shaped innocent virgins are blocked up, and waddle up and down like bigbellied women. Addison.

We pursued our march, to the terror of the market people, and the miscarriage of half a dozen bigbellied women. Addison.

BI'GGIN, bĭg'gĭn. n. s. [beguin, Fr.] A child's cap.

Sleep now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggin bound,
Snores out the watch of night. Shakspeare.

BIGHT, bīte'. n. s. It is explained by Skinner, the circumference of a coil of rope.

BI'GLY, bĭg'lē. adv. [from big.] Tumidly; haughtily; with a blustering manner.

Would'st thou not rather choose a small renown,
To be the may'r of some poor paltry town;
Bigly to look, and barb'rously to speak;
To pound false weights, and scanty measures break?
Dryden.

BI'GNESS, bĭg'nĕs. n. s. [from big.]

1. Bulk; greatness of quantity.

If panicum be laid below, and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

People were surprised at the bigness and uncouth deformity of the camel. L'Estrange's Fables.

The brain of man, in respect of his body, is much larger than any other animal's; exceeding in bigness three oxen's brains. Ray on the Creation.

2. Size, whether greater or smaller; comparative bulk.

Several sorts of rays make vibrations of several bignesses, which, according to their bignesses, excite sensations of several colours; and the air, according to their bignesses, excites sensations of several sounds. Newton's Opticks.

BI'GOT, bĭg'gŭt.[166] n. s. [The etymology of this word is unknown; but it is supposed, by Camden and others, to take its rise from some occasional phrase.] A man devoted unreasonably to a certain party; or prejudiced in favour of certain opinions; a blind zealot. It is used often with to before the object of zeal; as, a bigot to the Cartesian tenets.

Religious spite and pious spleen bred first
This quarrel, which so long the bigots nurst. Tate

In philosophy and religion, the bigots of all parties are generally the most positive. Watts.

BI'GOTED, bĭg'gŭt-ĕd. adj. [from bigot.] Blindly prepossessed in favour of something; irrationally zealous: with to.

Bigotted to this idol, we disclaim
Rest, health, and ease, for nothing but a name.
Garth.

Presbyterian merit, during the reign of that weak, bigotted, and ill-advised prince, will easily be computed. Swift.

Bi'gotry, big'gŭt-trė.[555] n. s. [from bigot.]
1. Blind zeal; prejudice; unreasonable warmth in favour of party or opinions: with the particle to.

Were it not for a bigotry to our own tenets, we could hardly imagine, that so many absurd, wicked, and bloody principles, should pretend to support themselves by the gospel. Watts.

2. The practice or tenet of a bigot.

Our silence makes our adversaries think we persist in those bigotries, which all good and sensible men despise. Pope.

Bi'gswoln, big'swōln. adj. [from big and swoln.] Turgid; ready to burst.

Might my bigs oln heart
Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow. Addison.

Big-uddered, big'ŭd-dŭrd. adj. [from big and udder.] Having large udders; having dugs swelled with milk.

Now, driv'n before him through the arching rock,
Came tumbling heaps on heaps th' unnumber'd flock,
Big-udder'd ewes, and goats of female kind. Pope.

Bi'lander, bil'ăn-dŭr.[503] n. s. [belandre, Fr.] A small vessel of about eighty tons burden, used for the carriage of goods. It is a kind of hoy, manageable by four or five men, and has masts and sails after the manner of a hoy. They are used chiefly in Holland, as being particularly fit for the canals. Savary. Trevoux.

Like bilanders to creep
Along the coast, and land in view to keep. Dryden.

Bi'lberry, bil'bėr-rė. n. s. [from bilg, Sax. a bladder, and berry, according to Skinner; vitis idæa.] A small shrub; and a sweet berry of that shrub; whortleberry.

Cricket, to Windsor's chimneys shalt thou leap;
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberries. Shaksp.

Bi'lbo, bil'bō. n. s. [corrupted from Bilboa, where the best weapons are made.] A rapier; a sword.

To be compassed like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head. Shak.

Bi'lboes, bil'bōze.[296] n. s. A sort of stocks, or wooden shackles for the feet, used for punishing offenders at sea.

Methought I lay
Worse than the mutinies in the bilboes. Shakspeare.

BILE, bīle. n. s. [bilis, Lat.] A thick, yellow, bitter liquor, separated in the liver, collected in the gall-bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum, or beginning of the jejunum, by the common duct. Its use is to sheathe or blunt the acids of the chyle, because they, being entangled with its sulphurs, thicken it so, that it cannot be sufficiently diluted by the succus pancreaticus, to enter the lacteal vessels. Quincy.

In its progression, soon the labour'd chyle
Receives the confluent rills of bitter bile;
Which, by the liver sever'd from the blood,
And striving through the gall pipe, here unload
Their yellow streams. Blackmore.

Bile, bīle. n. s. [bile, Sax. perhaps from bilis, Lat.] This is generally spelt boil; but, I think, less properly.] A sore angry swelling.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter:
Or rather a disease that's in my flesh;
Thou art a bile in my corrupted blood. Shaksp.

Those biles did run—say so—did not the general run? were not that a botchy sore? Shakspeare.

A furunculus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension. Wiseman.

Bilge, bĭlje.[74] n. s. The compass or breadth of a ship's bottom. Skinner.

To Bilge, bĭlje.[74] v. n. [from the noun.] To spring a leak; to let in water, by striking upon a rock; a sea term; now bulge. Skinner.

Bi'liary, bĭl'yă-rė.[113] adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Belonging to the bile.

Voracious animals, and such as do not chew, have a great quantity of gall; and some of them have the biliary duct inserted into the pylorus. Arbuthnot.

Bi'lingsgate, bĭl'lingz-gāte. n. s. [A cant word, borrowed from Bilingsgate in London, a place where there is always a crowd of low people, and frequent brawls and foul language.] Ribaldry; foul language.

There stript, fair rhetorick languish'd on the ground,
And shameful billingsgate her robes adorn. Pope.

Bi'linguous, bi-ling'gwŭs.[118] adj. [bilinguis, Lat.] Having, or speaking, two tongues.

Bi'lious, bĭl'yŭs.[113] adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Consisting of bile; partaking of bile.

Why bilious juice a golden light puts on,
And floods of chyle in silver currents run. Garth.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundance of a bilious alkali. Arbuthnot.

To BILK, bĭlk. v. a. [derived by Mr. Lye from the Gothick bilaican.] To cheat; to defraud, by running in debt, and avoiding payment.

Bilk'd stationers for yeomen stood prepar'd. Dryd.

What comedy, what farce can more delight,
Than grinning hunger, and the pleasing sight
Of your bilk'd hopes? Dryden.

BILL, bĭll. n. s. [bile, Sax. See Ball.] The beak of a fowl.

Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and with these they would cut an apple in two at one snap. Carew.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater or longer talons. Bacon.

In his bill
An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign! Milton.

No crowing cock does there his wings display,
Nor with his horny bill provoke the day. Dryden.

BILL, bĭll. n. s. [bille, ꝥbille, Sax. a two edged axe.]
1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a hedging bill; so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants armed, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the sickle or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle axe.

Yea distaff women manage rusty bills;
Against thy seat both young and old rebel. Shaksp.

BILL, bĭll. n. s. [billet, Fr.]
1. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive
Particular addition from the bill
That writes them all alike. Shakspeare.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,
Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no? Shakspeare.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Atterbury.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras.

The medicine was prepared according to the bill. L'Estrange.

Let them, but under your superiours, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryd.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,
Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. [In law.]

1. An obligation, but without condition, or forfeiture for non-payment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or else some fault that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress. Cowell.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials increased or decreased. Graunt.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill. Dryden.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the forementioned suppers. Arbuthnot.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

The comfortable sentences are bills of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions. Taylor.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid. Locke.

To Bill, bĭll. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To caress, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their murmuring. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
Like Philip and Mary on a shilling. Hudibras.

They bill, they tread; Alcyone compress'd
Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest. Dryd.

He that bears th' artillery of Jove,
The strong pounc'd eagle, and the billing dove. Dryd.

To Bill, bĭll. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

His masterpiece was a composition that he billed about under the name of a sovereign antidote. L'Estrange.

Bi'llet, bil'lît.[99] n. s. [billet, French.]

2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.

3. Billet-doux, or a soft billet; a love-letter.
'Twas then, Belinda! if report say true,
Thy eyes first open'd on a billet-doux. Pope.

4. [Bilot, Fr.] A small log of wood for the chimney.
Let us then calculate, when the bulk of a fagot or billet is dilated and rarified to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up. Digby on Bodies.
Their billet at the fire was found. Prior.

To Bi'llet, bil'lît. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.
Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:
Away, I say. Shakspeare.

2. To quarter soldiers.
They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting soldiers. Raleigh.
The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billeted upon them. Clarendon.

Bi'lliards, bil'yûrdz.[113] n. s. without a singular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from balyards, yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser:
Balyards much unfit,
And shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit. Hubberd.] A game at which a ball is forced against another on the table.
Let it alone; let's to billiards. Shakspeare.
Even nose and cheek withal,
Smooth as is the billiard ball. Ben Jonson.
Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table. Boyle.
When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion. Locke.

BI'LLOW, bil'lô. n. s. [bilge, Germ, bolg, Dan. probably of the same original with bilig, Sax. a bladder.] A wave swoln and hollow.
From whence the river Dee, as silver cleen,
His tumbling billows roll with gentle rore. Spenser.
Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them. Wotton.
Chasing Nereus with his trident throws
The billows from the bottom. Denham.

To Bi'llow, bil'lô. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.
The billowing snow, and violence of the show'r,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

Bi'llowy, bil'lô-ê. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.
And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson.

Bin, bin. n. s. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is reposited.
The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mort.
As when, from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot sallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

Bi'nary, bi'nâ-rê.[118] adj [from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

Bi'nary Arithmetick, bi'nâ-rê â-rîth'mê-tîk. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

Bi'shop, bîsh'ůp. n. s. [From episcopus, Lat. the Saxons formed biꝛcop, which was afterwards softened into bishop.] One of the head order of the clergy.

A bishop is an overseer, or superintendant, of religious matters in the Christian church. Ayliffe.

You shall find him well accompany'd
With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops.
Shakspeare.

Their zealous superstition thinks, or pretends, they cannot do God a greater service, than to destroy the primitive, apostolical, and anciently universal government of the church by bishops. K. Charles.

In case a bishop should commit treason and felony, and forfeit his estate, with his life, the lands of his bishoprick remain still in the church. South.

On the word bishop, in French eveque, I would observe, that there is no natural connexion between the sacred office and the letters or sound; for eveque, and bishop, signify the same office, though there is not one letter alike in them. Watts's Logick.

Bi'shop, bîsh'ůp.[166] n. s. A cant word for a mixture of wine, oranges, and sugar.

Fine oranges,
Well roasted, with sugar and wine in a cup,
They'll make a sweet bishop, when gentlefolks sup.
Swift.

To Bi'shop, bîsh'ůp. v. a. [from the noun.] To confirm; to admit solemnly into the church.

They are prophane, imperfect, oh! too bad,
Except confirm'd and bishoped by thee. Donne.

Bi'shoprick, bîsh'ůp-rîk. n. s. [biꝛcop-pice, Saxon.] The diocese of a bishop; the district over which the jurisdiction of a bishop extends.

It will be fit, that, by the king's supreme power in causes ecclesiastical, they be subordinate under some bishop, and bishoprick, of this realm. Bacon.

A virtuous woman should reject marriage, as a good man does a bishoprick; but I would advise neither to persist in refusing. Addison's Spectator.

Those pastors had episcopal ordination, possessed preferments in the church, and were sometimes promoted to bishopricks themselves. Swift.

Bi'shopsweed, bîsh'ůps-wêêd. n. s. [ammi, Lat.] The name of a plant.

Bisk, bîsk. n. s. [bisque, Fr.] Soup; broth made by boiling several sorts of flesh.

A prince, who in a forest rides astray,
And weary, to some cottage finds the way,
Talks of no pyramids, or fowls, or bisks of fish,
But hungry sups his cream serv'd up in earthen dish.
King.

Bi'sket, bîs'kît. See Biscuit.

Bi'smuth, bîz'můth. n. s. The same as marcasite; a hard, white, brittle, mineral substance, of a metalline nature found at Misnia; supposed to be a recrementitious matter thrown off in the formation of tin. Some esteem it a metal sui generis; though it usually contains some silver. There is an artificial bismuth made, for the shops, of tin. Quincy.

Bisse'xtile, bîs-sêks'tîl.[140] n. s. [from bis and sextilis, Lat.] Leap year; the year in which the day, arising from six odd hours in each year, is intercalated.

The year of the sun consisteth of three hundred and sixty-five days and six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted, will, in time, deprave the compute: and this was the occasion of bissextile, or leap year. Brown.

Towards the latter end of February is the bissextile, or intercalar day; called bissextile, because the sixth of the calends of March is twice repeated. Holder on Time.

Bi'sson, bîs'sůn.[166] adj. [derived by Skinner from by and sin.] Blind.

But who, oh! who hath seen the mobled queen
Run barefoot up and down, threat'ning the flames
With bisson rheum? Shaksp. Hamlet.

What harm can your bisson conspectuities glean out of his character. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

1. To crush, or pierce with the teeth.

My very enemy's dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night
Against my fire. Shakspeare.

Such smiling rogues as these.
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intricate t' unloose. Shakspeare.

These are the youths that thunder at a play-house, and fight for bitten apples. Shakspeare.

He falls; his arms upon his body sound,
And with his bloody teeth he bites the ground. Dryd.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone, who has now indeed recovered. Tatler.

Their foul mouths have not opened their lips without a falsity; though they have showed their teeth as if they would bite off my nose.
Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

2. To give pain by cold.

Here feel we the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile. Shaksp.

Full fifty years, harness'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the severer heats of parching summer. Rowe.

3. To hurt or pain with reproach.

Each poet with a diff'rent talent writes;
One praises, one instructs, another bites. Roscommon.

I would have made them skip. Shaksp.

5. To make the mouth smart with an acrid taste.

It may be the first water will have more of the scent, as more fragrant; and the second more of the taste, as more bitter, or biting. Bacon.

6. To cheat; to trick; to defraud: a low phrase.

Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away:
He pledg'd it to the knight; the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit. Pope.

If you had allowed half the fine gentlemen to have conversed with you, they would have been strangely bit, while they thought only to fall in love with a fair lady. Pope.

BITE, bite. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The seizure of any thing by the teeth.

Does he think he can endure the everlasting burnings, or arm himself against the bites of the never-dying worm? South.

Nor dogdays parching heat, that splits the rocks,
Is half so harmful as the greedy flocks;
Their venom'd bite, and scars indented on the stocks.
Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.

2. The act of a fish that takes the bait.

I have known a very good fisher angle diligently four or six hours for a river carp, and not have a bite. Walton.

3. A cheat; a trick; a fraud: in low and vulgar language.

Let a man be ne'er so wise,
He may be caught with sober lies;
For, take it in its proper light,
'Tis just what coxcombs call a bite. Swift.

How blackberries they pluck'd in deserts wild,
And fearless at the glittering faulchion smil'd. Gay.

BLA'CKBIRD, blăk'bûrd. n. s. [from black and bird.] The name of a bird.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, gold-finches, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A schoolboy ran unto 't, and thought
The crib was down, the blackbird caught. Swift.

To BLA'CKEN, blăk'kn.[103] v. a. [from black.]

1. To make of a black colour.

Bless'd by aspiring winds, he finds the strand
Blackened by crowds. Prior.
While the long fun'rals blacken all the way. Pope.

2. To darken; to cloud.

That little cloud that appeared at first to Elijah's servant no bigger than a man's hand, but presently after grew, and spread, and blackened the face of the whole heaven. South.

3. To defame, or make infamous.

Let us blacken him what we can, said that miscreant Harrison of the blessed king, upon the wording and drawing up his charge against his approaching trial. South.
The morals blacken'd, when the writings 'scape,
The libell'd person, and the pictur'd shape. Pope.

To BLA'CKEN, blâk'kn. v. n. To grow black, or dark.

The hollow sound
Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around,
Air blacken'd, roll'd the thunder, groan'd the ground. Dryden.

BLA'CKISH, blâk'ish. adj. [from black.] Somewhat black.

Part of it all the year continues in the form of a blackish oil. Boyle.

BLA'CKMOOR, blâk'môre. n. s. [from black and Moor.] A negro.

The land of Chus makes no part of Africa; nor is it the habitation of blackmoors; but the country of Arabia, especially the Happy and Stony. Brown.
More to west
The realm of Bacchus to the blackmoor sea. Milton.

BLA'CKNESS, blâk'nês. n, s. [from black.]

1. Black colour.

Blackness is only a disposition to absorb, or stifle, without reflection, most of the rays of every sort that fall on the bodies. Locke.
There would emerge one or more very black spots, and, within those, other spots of an intenser blackness. Newton.
His tongue, his prating tongue, had chang'd him quite
To sooty blackness from the purest white. Addison.

2. Darkness.

His faults in him seem as the spots of heav'n,
More fiery by night's blackness. Shakspeare.

3. Atrociousness; horribleness; wickedness.

BLA'CKSMITH, blâk'smi*th*. n. s. [from black and smith.] A smith that works in iron; so called from being very smutty.

The blacksmith may forge what he pleases. Howel.
Shut up thy doors with bars and bolts; it will be impossible for the blacksmith to make them so fast, but a cat and a whoremaster will find a way through them. Spectator.

BLA'CKTAIL, blâk'tâle. n. s. [from black and tail.] A fish; a kind of perch, by some called ruffs, or popes. See POPE. Dict.

BLA'DDER,[98] blâd'dûr. n. s. [bladðpe, Saxon; blader, Dutch.]

1. That vessel in the body which contains the urine.

The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatable, for receiving and containing the urine till an opportunity of emptying it. Ray.

2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass
Was nothing left, but like an empty bladder was. Spenser.
A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those, that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers in a sea of glory,
But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride
At length broke under me. Shakspeare.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLA'DDER-NUT, blâd'dûr-nût. n. s. [staphylodendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLADE, blâde. n. s. [blæð, bleð, Saxon; bled, Fr.] The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.
Send in the feeding flocks betimes, t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.
If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use. Swift.
Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE, blâde. n. s. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle. It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He sought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. Fairy Qu.
She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her sabre with ignoble blood. Dryden.
Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam, whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, Sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L'Estrange.
Then, turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I pri'thee, this troublesome blade. Prior.

BLADE of the Shoulder, BLADEBONE, blâde'bône. n. s. The bone called by anatomists the scapula or scapular bone.

He fell most furiously on the broiled relicks of a shoulder of mutton, commonly called a bladebone. Pope.

To BLADE, blâde. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish or fit with a blade.

BLA'DED, blâ'dêd. adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass. Shak.
As where the lightning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dryd.

BLAIN, blâne. n. s. [blegene, Sax. bleyne, Dutch.] A pustule; a botch; a blister.

Itches, blains,
Sow all th'Athenian bosoms, and the crop
Be general leprosy. Shakspeare.
Botches and blains must all his flesh imboss,
And all his people. Milton.
When'er I hear a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd;
Which breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow filth my linen stains. Swift.

BLA'MABLE, blâ'mâ-bl.[405] adj. [from blame.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLA'MABLENESS, blâ'mâ-bl-nês. n. s. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

BLA'MABLY, blâ'mâ-blê. adv. [from blamable.] Culpably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

To BLAME, blâme. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault: it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not control. Shaksp.
Porphyrius, you too far did tempt your fate;
'Tis true your duty, to me it became;
But, praising that, I must your conduct blame. Dryden.
Each finding like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes but rarely, of.

Tomoreus he blamed of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Knolles' Hist. of the Turks.

BLAME, blâme. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Imputation of a fault.

In arms, the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.
They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately, enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confest to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker.
I unspeak mine own detraction, here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shaksp.

3. Hurt. Not now in use.

Therewith upon his crest
With rigour so outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Fairy Queen.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French a tort; culpable; worthy of censure.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,

To part so slightly with your wife's first gift.
Shaksp.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but whether they were to blame in the manner.
Stillingfleet.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLA'MEFUL, blâme'fûl. adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shaksp.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shaksp.

BLA'MELESS, blâme'lês. adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom, x. 5.

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r.
Dryden.

Such a lessening of our coin will deprive great numbers of blameless men of a fifth part of their estates. Locke.

2. Sometimes it is used with of.

We will be blameless of this thine oath.
Joshua, ii. 17.

BLA'MELESLY, blâmé-lês-lè. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelesly, without pertinacy, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammond.

BLA'MELESNESS, blâme'lês-nês. n. s. [from blameless.] Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved, with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelesness of the inferiour agent. Hammond.

BLA'MER, blâ'mûr.[98] n. s. [from blame.] One that blames or finds fault; a censurer.

In me you've hallowed a pagan muse,
And denizon'd a stranger, who mistaught
By blamers of the times they marr'd hath sought
Virtues in corners. Donne.

BLAMEWO'RTHY, blâme'wûr-thè. adj. [from blame and worthy.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of blame or censure.

Although the same should be blameworthy, yet this age hath forborn to incur the danger of any such blame. Hooker.

To BLANCH, blânsh. v. a. [blanchir, Fr.]

1. To whiten; to change from some other colour to white.

You can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine is blanch'd with fear. Shakspeare.

A way of whiting wax cheaply may be of use; and we have set down the practice of tradesmen who blanch it. Boyle.

And sin's black dye seems blanch'd by age to virtue. Dryden.

2. To strip or peel such things as have husks.

Their suppers may be biscuit, raisins of the sun, and a few blanched almonds. Wiseman.

BLAND, blând. adj. [blandus, Lat.] Soft; mild; gentle.

In her face excuse
Came prologue, and apology too prompt;
Which, with bland words at will, she thus address'd.
Milton.

And even calm
Perpetual reign'd, save what the zephyrs bland
Breath'd o'er the blue expanse. Thomson.

To BLA'NDISH, blân'-dish. v. a. [blandior, Lat.] To smooth; to soften. I have met with this word in no other passage.

Must'ring all her wiles,
With blandish'd parleys, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries, she surceas'd not day nor night
To storm me over-watch'd, and weary'd out. Milt.

BLA'NDISHMENT, blân'dish-mênt. n. s. [from blandish; blanditiæ, Lat.]

1. Act of fondness; expression of tenderness by gesture.

The little babe up in his arms he bent,
Who, with sweet pleasure and bold blandishment,
'Gan smile. Spenser.

Each bird and beast, behold
Approaching two and two; these cow'ring low
With blandishment. Milton.

2. Soft words; kind speeches.

He was both well and fair spoken, and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to effect or persuade any thing that he took to heart. Bacon.

3. Kind treatment; caress.

Him Dido now with blandishment detains;
But I suspect the town where Juno reigns. Dryd.

In order to bring those infidels within the wide circle of whiggish community, neither blandishments nor promises are omitted. Swift.

BLANK, blânk'. adj. [blanc, Fr. derived by Menage from Albianus, thus: Albianus, albianicus, bianicus, biancus, bianco, blanicus, blancus, blanc; by others, from blanc, which, in Danish, signifies shining; in conformity to which, the Germans have blancker to shine; the Saxons, blæcan; and the English, bleach to whiten.]

3. Pale; confused; crushed; dispirited; subdued; depressed.

There without such boast, or sign of joy,
Solicitous and blank, he thus began. Milton.

Adam, soon as he heard
The fatal trespass done by Eve, amaz'd,
Astonied stood, and blank, while horrour chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd.
Milton.

But now no face divine contentment wears;
'Tis all blank sadness, or continual fears. Pope.

4. Without rhyme; where the rhyme is blanched, or missed.

The lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for it. Shakspeare.

Long have your ears been filled with tragick parts;
Blood and blank verse, have harden'd all your hearts.
Addison.

Our blank verse, where there is no rhyme to support the expression, is extremely difficult to such as are not masters in the tongue. Addison.

BLANK, blânk. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A void space on paper.

I cannot write a paper full as I used to do; and yet I will not forgive a blank of half an inch from you.
Swift.

2. A lot, by which nothing is gained; which has no prize marked upon it.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears. Shaksp.

In fortune's lottery lies
A heap of blanks, like this, for one small prize.
Dryden.

The world the coward will despise,
When life's a blank, who pulls not for a prize.
Dryden.

3. A paper from which the writing is effaced.

She has left him
The blank of what he was;
I tell thee, eunuch, she has quite unmann'd him.
Dryden.

4. A paper unwritten; any thing without marks or characters.

For him, I think not on him; for his thoughts,
Would they were blanks, rather than filled with me.
Shakspeare.

Omission to do what is necessary,
Seals a commission to a blank of danger. Shaksp.

For the book of knowledge fair,
Presented with an universal blank
Of nature's works, to me expung'd and ras'd. Milton.

Life may be one great blank, which, though not blotted with sin, is yet without any characters of grace or virtue. Rogers.

5. The point to which an arrow is directed; so called, because, to be more visible, it was marked with white. Now disused.

Slander,
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank,
Transports its poison'd shot. Shakspeare.

6. Aim; shot. Not used.

The harlot king
Is quite beyond my aim; out of the blank
And level of my brain. Shakspeare.

BLASPHE'MER, blås-fê-mûr. n. s. [from blaspheme.] A wretch that speaks of God in impious and irreverent terms.

Who was before a blasphemer and a persecutor, and injurious. 1 Timothy.

Even that blasphemer himself would inwardly reverence his reprover, as he in his heart really despises him for his cowardly base silence. South.

Deny the curst blasphemer's tongue to rage,
And turn God's fury from an impious age. Tickell.

Should each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
Because the insult 's not to man, but God? Pope.

BLA'SPHEMOUS, blås'fê-mûs.[503] adj. [from blaspheme. It is usually spoken with the accent on the first syllable, but used by Milton with it on the second.] Impiously irreverent with regard to God.

O man, take heed how thou the gods do move,
To cause full wrath, which thou can'st not resist;
Blasphemous words the speaker vain doth prove. Sidney.

And dar'st thou to the Son of God propound
To worship thee accurst; now more accurst
For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,
And more blasphemous. Milton.

A man can hardly pass the streets, without having his ears grated with horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses. Tillotson.

That any thing that wears the name of a christian, or but of man, should venture to own such a villainous, impudent, and blasphemous assertion in the face of the world, as this! South.

BLA'SPHEMOUSLY, blås'fê-mûs-lè. adv. [from blaspheme.] Impiously; with wicked irreverence.

Where is the right use of his reason, while he would blaspheme set up to controul, the commands of the Almighty? Swift.

Blasphemy, strictly and properly, is an offering of some indignity, or injury, unto God himself, either by words or writing. Ayliffe.

But that my heart 's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy, ere bid you fly;
But fly you must. Shakspeare.

Intrinsick goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety, to the secret will of God; or else God could not be defined good, so far as his thoughts and secrets, but only superficially good, as far as he is pleased to reveal himself, which is perfect blasphemy to imagine. Hammond.

BLAST, blåst. n. s. [from blæɼc, Sax. blasen, Germ. to blow.]

1. A gust or puff of wind.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakspeare.

Welcome, then,
Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace;
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the worst
Owes nothing to thy blasts. Shakspeare.

Perhaps thy fortune doth control the winds,
Doth loose or bind their blasts in secret cave. Fairf.

Three ships were hurry'd by the southern blast,
And on the secret shelves with fury cast. Dryden.

2. The sound made by blowing any instrument of wind musick.

My words, in hopes to blaze a stedfast mind,
This marble chose, as of like temper known. Sidney.

Thou shalt live, till we can find a time,
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends,
Beg pardon of thy prince; and call thee back. Shakspeare.

When beggars die, there are no comets seen,
The heav'ns themselves blaze forth the death of princes. Shakspeare.

But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter. Mark.
Such musick worthiest were to blaze
The peerless height of her immortal praise,
Whose lustre leads us. Milton.
Far beyond
The sons of Anak, famous now and blaz'd
Fearless of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about. Milton.
Whose follies blaz'd about, to all are known,
And are a secret to himself alone. Glanville.
But mortals, know, 'tis still our greatest pride
To blaze those virtues which the good would hide. Pope.

3. To blazon; to give an account of ensigns armorial in proper terms. This is not now used.
This, in ancient times, was called a fierce; and you should then have blazed it thus: he bears a fierce, sable, between two fierces, or. Peacham.

BLA'ZER, blâ'zûr.[98] n. s. [from blaze.] One that spreads reports.
Utterers of secrets he from thence debarr'd,
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime,
His larum-bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time;
Early and late it rung, at evening and at prime. Spenser.

To BLA'ZON, blâ'zn.[170] v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]
1. To explain, in proper terms, the figures on ensigns armorial.

The billows lave the skies, and ocean groans below.
Dryden.

Our captain thought his ship in so great danger, that he confessed himself to a capuchin, who was on board. Addison.

He ordered his men to arm long poles with sharp hooks, wherewith they took hold of the tackling which held the mainyard to the mast of their enemy's ship; then, rowing their own ship, they cut the tackling, and brought the mainyard by the board.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

To BOARD, bōrd. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enter a ship by force; the same as to storm, used of a city.

I boarded the king's ship: now on the beak,
Now in the waste, the deck, in every cabin,
I flam'd amazement. Shaksp.

He, not inclin'd the English ship to board,
More on his guns relies than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd;
It miss'd the duke, but his great heart it griev'd.
Waller.

Arm, arm, she cry'd, and let our Tyrians board
With ours his fleet, and carry fire and sword. Denh.

Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Matthew.
By custom, practice, and patience, all difficulties and hardships, whether of body or of fortune, are made easy. L'Estrange.
2. Matter: opposed to spirit.
3. A person: a human being: whence somebody and nobody.
Surely, a wise body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might say, were it not for me thou wouldst freeze. Hooker.
A deflow'red maid!
And by an eminent body, that enforc'd
The law against it. Shakspeare.
'Tis a passing shame,
That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen. Shaksp.
No body seeth me; what need I to fear? the Most High will not remember my sins. Ecclus.
All civility and reason obliged every body to submit. Clarendon.
Good may be drawn out of evil; and a body's life may be saved without having any obligation to his preserver. L'Estrange.
4. Reality; opposed to representation: a scriptural sense.
A shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ. Colossians.
5. A collective mass; a joint power.
There is in the knowledge both of God and man this certainty, that life and death have divided between them the whole body of mankind. Hooker.
There were so many disaffected persons of the nobility, that there might a body start up for the king. Clarendon.
When pigmies pretend to form themselves into a body, it is time for us, who are men of figure, to look about us. Addison's Guardian.
6. The main army; the battle: distinct from the wings, van, and rear.
The van of the king's army was led by the general and Wilmot; in the body was the king and the prince; and the rear consisted of one thousand foot, commanded under colonel Thelwell. Clarendon.
7. A corporation; a number of men united by some common tie.
I shall now mention a particular wherein your whole body will be certainly against me, and the laity, almost to a man, on my side. Swift.
Nothing was more common, than to hear that reverend body charged with what is inconsistent; despised for their poverty, and hated for their riches. Swift.
8. The main part; the bulk: as, the body, or hull, of a ship; the body of a coach, the body of a church; the body, or trunk, of a man; the body, or trunk, of a tree.
Thence sent rich merchandizes by boat to Babylon; from whence, by the body of Euphrates, as far as it bended westward; and, afterward, by a branch thereof. Raleigh.
This city has navigable rivers, that run up into the body of Italy; they might supply many countries with fish. Addison.
9. A substance; matter, as distinguished from other matter.
Even a metalline body, and therefore much more a vegetable or animal, may, by fire, be turned into water. Boyle.
10. [In geometry.] Any solid figure.
11. A pandect; a general collection: as, a body of the civil law; a body of divinity.
12. Strength; as, wine of a good body.

To BO'DY, bŏd'dė. v. a. [from the noun.] To produce in some form.
As imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shape. Shakspeare.

BOG, bŏg. n. s. [bog soft, Irish; bague, Fr.] A marsh; a morass; a ground too soft to bear the weight of the body.
Through fire and through flame, through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire. Shaksp.
A gulf profound! as that Serbonian bog,
Betwixt Damiata and mount Casius old. Milton.
He walks upon bogs and whirlpools; wheresoever he treads, he sinks. South.
Learn from so great a wit, a land of bogs
With ditches fenc'd, a heaven fat with fogs. Dryd.
He is drawn, by a sort of ignis fatuus, into bogs and mire almost every day of his life. Watts.

BOG-TROTTER, bŏg'trŏt-tûr. n. s. [from bog and trot.] One that lives in a boggy country.

To BO'GGLE, bŏg'gl.[405] v. n. [from bogil, Dutch, a spectre, a bugbear, a phantom.]
1. To start; to fly back; to fear to come forward.
You boggle shrewdly; every feather starts you. Shakspeare.
We start and boggle at every unusual appearance, and cannot endure the sight of the bugbear. Granville.
Nature, that rude, and in her first essay,
Stood boggling at the roughness of the way;
Us'd to the road, unknowing to return,
Goes boldly on, and loves the path when worn. Dryd.
2. To hesitate; to be in doubt.
And never boggle to restore
The members you deliver o'er,
Upon demand. Hudibras.
The well-shaped changeling is a man that has a rational soul, say you? Make the ears a little longer, and more pointed, and the nose a little flatter than ordinary, and then you begin to boggle. Locke.
3. To play fast and loose; to dissemble.
When summoned to his last end, it was no time for him to boggle with the world. Howel.

BO'GGLER, bŏg'glûr. n. s. [from boggle.] A doubter; a timorous man.
You have been a boggler ever. Shaksp.

BO'GGY, bŏg'gė.[283] adj. [from bog.] Marshy; swampy.

BO'GHOUSE, bŏg'hŏûse. n. s. [from bog and house.] A house of office.

BOHE'A, bō-hė'. n. s. [an Indian word.] A species of tea, of higher colour, and more astringent taste, than green tea.
Coarse pewter, consisting chiefly of lead, is part of the bales in which bohea tea was brought from China. Woodward.
As some frail cup of China's fairest mold
The tumults of the boiling bohea braves,
And holds secure the coffee's sable waves. Tickell.
She went from opera, park, assembly, play,
To morning walks, and pray'rs three hours a day;
To part her time, 'twixt reading and bohea,
To muse, and spill her solitary tea. Pope.

To BOIL, bŏil.[299] v. n. [bouillir, Fr. bullio, Lat.]
1. To be agitated by heat; to fluctuate with heat.
He saw there boil the fiery whirlpools. Chapman.
Suppose the earth removed, and placed nearer to the sun, in the orbit of Mercury, there the whole ocean would boil with extremity of heat. Bentley.
2. To be hot; to be fervent, or effervescent.
That strength with which my boiling youth was fraught,
When in the vale of Balasor I fought. Dryden.
Well I knew
What perils youthful ardour would pursue,
That boiling blood would carry thee too far. Dryden.
3. To move with an agitation like that of boiling water.
Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide,
The trembling fins the boiling waves divide. Gay.
4. To be in hot liquor, in order to be made tender by the heat.
Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakspeare.
5. To cook by boiling.
If you live in a rich family, roasting and boiling are below the dignity of your office, and which it becomes you to be ignorant of. Swift.
6. To boil over. To run over the vessel with heat.
A few soft words and a kiss, and the good man melts; see how nature works and boils over in him. Congreve.
This hollow was a vast cauldron, filled with melted matter, which as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain. Addison on Italy.

To BOIL, bŏil. v. a. To heat, by putting into boiling water; to seeth.
To try whether seeds be old or new, the sense cannot inform; but if you boil them in water, the new seeds will sprout sooner. Bacon.
In eggs boiled and roasted, into which the water entereth not at all, there is scarce any difference to be discerned. Bacon.

BOIL, bŏil. n. s. See BILE.

BO'ILARY, bŏil'ă-rė. n. s. [from To boil.] A place at the salt works where the salt is boiled.

BO'ILER, bŏil'ûr. n. s. [from boil.]
1. The person that boils any thing.
That such alterations of terrestrial matter are not impossible, seems evident from that notable practice of the boilers of salt-petre. Boyle.
2. The vessel in which any thing is boiled.
This coffee-room is much frequented; and there are generally several pots and boilers before the fire. Woodward.

BO'ISTEROUS, bŏis'tėr-ŭs. adj. [byster furious, Dutch.]
1. Violent; loud; roaring; stormy.
By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust
Ensuing danger; as by proof we see
The waters swell before a boisterous storm. Shaksp.
As when loud winds a well-grown oak would rend
Up by the roots, this way and that they bend
His reeling trunk, and with a bois'rous sound

Scatter his leaves, and strew them on the ground. Waller.

2. Turbulent; tumultuous; furious.

Spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shaksp.

His sweetness won a more regard
Unto his place, than all the boist'rous moods
That ignorant greatness practiseth. Ben Jonson.

God into the hands of their deliverer
Puts invincible might,
To quell the mighty of the earth, th' oppressor
The brute and boist'rous force of violent men. Milt.

Still must I beg thee not to name Sempronius:
Lucia, I like not that loud boisterous man. Addison.

3. Unwieldy; clumsily violent.

His boisterous club, so buried in the ground,
He could not rearen up again so light,
But that the knight him at advantage found. Fairy Queen.

4. It is used by Woodward of heat; violent.

When the sun hath gained a greater strength, the heat becomes too powerful and boisterous for them. Natural History.

Bo'ISTEROUSLY, bŏis'tĕr-ŭs-lĕ. adv. [from boisterous.] Violently; tumultuously.

A sceptre, snatch'd with an unruly hand,
Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd. Shaksp.

Those are all remains of the universal deluge, when the water of the ocean, being boisterously turned out upon the earth, bore along with it all moveable bodies. Woodward.

Another faculty of the intellect comes boisterously in, and wakes me from so pleasing a dream. Swift.

Bo'ISTEROUSNESS, bŏis'tĕr-ŭs-nĕs. n. s. [from boisterous.] The state or quality of being boisterous; tumultuousness; turbulence.

Bo'LARY, bō'lâ-rĕ. adj. [from bole.] Partaking of the nature of bole, or clay.

A weak and inanimate kind of loadstone, with a few magnetic lines, but chiefly consisting of a bolary and clammy substance. Brown's Vulg. Err.

BOLD, bōld. adj. [balð, Saxon.]

1. Daring; brave; stout; courageous; magnanimous; fearless; intrepid.

The wicked flee when no man pursueth; but the righteous are bold as a lion. Proverbs.

I have seen the councils of a noble country grow bold or timorous, according to the fits of his good or ill health that managed them. Temple.

2. Executed with spirit, and without mean caution.

These, nervous, bold; those, languid and remiss. Roscommon.

The cathedral church is a very bold work, and a master-piece of Gothick architecture. Addison.

3. Confident; not scrupulous; not timorous.

We were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention. 1 Thess.

I can be bold to say, that this age is adorned with some men of that judgment, that they could open new and undiscovered ways to knowledge. Locke.

4. Impudent; rude.

In thy prosperity he will be as thyself, and will be bold over thy servants. If thou be brought low, he will be against thee. Ecclus.

5. Licentious; such as shew great liberty of fiction, or expression.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.

Which no bold tales of gods or monsters swell,
But human passions, such as with us dwell. Waller.

6. Standing out to the view; striking to the eye.

Catachreses and hyperboles are to be used judiciously, and placed in poetry, as heightenings and shadows in painting, to make the figure bolder, and cause it to stand off to sight. Dryden.

7. Open; smooth; even; level; a sailor's term.

Her dominions have bold accessible coasts. Howel.

8. To make bold. To take freedoms: a phrase not grammatical, though common. To be bold is better; as, I was bold to tell the house, that scandalous livings make scandalous ministers. Rudgerd.

I have made bold to send to your wife;
My suit is, that she will to Desdemona
Procure me some access. Shaksp.

Making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand commission. Shaksp.

And were y' as good as George a Green,
I shall make bold to turn agen. Hudibras.

I durst not make thus bold with Ovid, lest some future Milbourn should arise. Dryden.

Some men have the fortune to be esteemed wits, only for making bold to scoff at these things, which the greatest part of mankind reverence. Tillotson.

To Bo'LDEN, bōld'dn.[103] v. a. [from bold] To make bold; to give confidence.

Quick inventers, and fair ready speakers, being boldened with their present abilities to say more, and perchance better too, at the sudden for that present, than any other can do, use less help of diligence and study. Aschams Schoolmaster.

I am much too vent'rous
In tempting of your patience, but am bolden'd
Under your promis'd pardon. Shaksp.

Bo'LDFACE, bōld'fāse. n. s. [from bold and face.] Impudence; sauciness; a term of reproach and reprehension.

How now, boldface! cries an old trot: sirrah, we eat our own hens, I'd have you know; what you eat, you steal. L'Estrange.

Bo'LDFACED, bōld'fāste. adj. [from bold and face.] Impudent.

I have seen those silliest of creatures; and, seeing their rare works, I have seen enough to confute all the boldfaced atheists of this age. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Bo'LDLY, bōld'lĕ. adv. [from bold.]

1. In a bold manner; with courage; with spirit.

Thus we may boldly speak, being strengthened with the example of so reverend a prelate. Hooker.

I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stirr'd up by heav'n, thus boldly for his king. Shaksp.

2. It may perhaps be sometimes used, in a bad sense, for impudently.

Bo'LDNESS, bōld'nĕs. n. s. [from bold.]

1. Courage; bravery; intrepidity; spirit; fortitude; magnanimity; daringness.

Her horse she rid so, as might shew a fearful boldness, daring to do that which she knew not how to do. Sidney.

2. Exemption from caution and scrupulous nicety.

The boldness of the figures is to be hidden sometimes by the address of the poet, that they may work their effect upon the mind. Dryden.

3. Freedom; liberty.

Great is my boldness of speech toward you; great is my glorying in you. 2 Corinthians.

4. Confident trust in God.

Our fear excludeth not that boldness which becometh saints. Hooker.

We have boldness and access with confidence, by the faith of him. Ephesians.

Having therefore boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. Hebrews.

5. Assurance; freedom from bashfulness; confident mien.

Wonderful is the case of boldness in civil business: what first? Boldness. What second and third? Boldness. And yet boldness is a child of ignorance and baseness, far inferiour to other parts. Bacon.

Sure, if the guilt were theirs, they could not charge thee
With such a gallant boldness; if 'twere thine,
Thou couldst not hear 't with such a silent scorn. Denham.

His distance, though it does not instruct him to think wiser than other princes, yet it helps him to speak with more boldness what he thinks. Temple.

Boldness is the power to speak or do what we intend, before others, without fear or disorder. Locke.

6. Impudence.

That moderation, which useth to suppress boldness, and to make them conquer that suffer. Hooker.

BOLE, bōle. n. s.

1. The body or trunk of a tree.

All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks, and down their curled brows
Fell bustling to the earth; and up went all the boles and boughs. Chapman.

But when the smoother bole from knots is free,
We make a deep incision in the tree. Dryden.

View well this tree, the queen of all the grove;
How vast her bole, how wide her arms are spread,
How high above the rest she shoots her head! Dryden.

2. A kind of earth.

Bole Armeniack is an astringent earth, which takes its name from Armenia, the country from which we have it. Woodward.

3. A measure of corn, containing six bushels.

Of good barley put eight boles, that is, about six English quarters, in a stone trough. Mortimer.

BO'LIS, bō'lĭs. n. s. [Latin.]

Bolis is a great fiery ball, swiftly hurried through the air, and generally drawing a tail after it. Aristotle calls it capra. There have often been immense balls of this kind. Muschenbroeck.

BOLL, bōle.[406] n. s. A round stalk or stem; as, a boll of flax.

To BOLL, bōle. v. n. [from the noun.] To rise in a stalk.

And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was bolled. Exodus.

BO'LSTER, bōle'stŭr. n. s. [bolꝑꝛe, Sax. bolster, Dutch.]

1. Something laid on the bed, to raise and support the head; commonly a bag filled with down or feathers.

Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or 'gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm
Leans her unpillow'd head. Milton.

This arm shall be a bolster for thy head;
I'll fetch clean straw to make a soldier's bed. Gay.

2. A pad, or quilt, to hinder any pressure, or fill up any vacuity.

Up goes her hand, and off she slips
The bolsters that supply her hips. Swift.

3. A pad, or compress, to be laid on a wound.

The bandage is the girt, which hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends tacked firmly together. Wiseman.

4. [In horsemanship.]

The bolsters of a saddle are those parts raised upon the bows, to hold the rider's thigh. Farrier's Dict.

To Bo'LSTER, bōle'stŭr. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support the head with a bolster.

2. To afford a bed to.

Mortal eyes do see them bolster,
More than their own. Shakspeare's Othello.

3. To hold wounds together with a compress.

The practice of bolstering the cheeks forward, does little service to the wound, and is very uneasy to the patient. Sharp.

4. To support; to hold up; to maintain. This is now an expression somewhat coarse and obsolete.

We may be made wiser by the publick persuasions grafted in men's minds, so they be used to further the truth, not to bolster errour. Hooker.

The lawyer sets his tongue to sale for the bolstering out of unjust causes. Hakewill

It was the way of many to bolster up their crazy doating consciences with confidences. South.

BOLT, bôlt. n. s. [boult, Dutch; βόλις.]

1. An arrow; a dart shot from a crossbow.

Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell;
It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound. Shakspeare.

The blunted bolt against the nymph he drest;
But with the sharp transfix'd Apollo's breast. Dryd.

2. Lightning; a thunderbolt.

Sing'd with the flames, and with the bolts transfix'd,
With native earth your blood the monsters mix'd. Dryden.

3. Bolt upright; that is, upright as an arrow.

Brush iron, native or from the mine, consisteth of long striæ, about the thickness of a small knitting needle, bolt upright, like the bristles of a stiff brush. Grew.

As I stood bolt upright upon one end, one of the ladies burst out. Addison.

4. The bar of a door, so called from being straight like an arrow. We now say, shoot the bolt, when we speak of fastening or opening a door.

'Tis not in thee, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in. Shakspeare.

5. An iron to fasten the legs of a prisoner. This is, I think, corrupted from bought, or link.

Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him. Shakspeare.

To BOLT, bôlt. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with a bolt.

The bolted gates flew open at the blast;
The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast. Dryd.

2. To blurt out, or throw out precipitantly.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milt.

3. To fasten, as a bolt or pin; to pin; to keep together.

That I could reach the axle, where the pins are
Which bolt this frame, that I might pull them out! Ben Jonson.

4. To fetter; to shackle.

It is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change. Shakspeare.

5. To sift, or separate the parts of any thing with a sieve. [bluter, Fr.]

He now had bolted all the flour. Spenser.

In the bolting and sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal. Wotton.

I cannot bolt this matter to the bran,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden.

6. To examine by sifting; to try out; to lay open.

It would be well bolted out, whether great refractions may not be made upon reflections as upon direct beams. Bacon.

The judge, or jury, or parties, or the council, or attornies, propounding questions, beats and bolts out the truth much better than when the witness delivers only a formal series. Hale.

Time and nature will bolt out the truth of things, through all disguises. L'Estrange.

7. To purify; to purge. This is harsh.

The fanned snow,
That's bolted by the northern blast twice o'er. Shakspeare.

To BOLT, bôlt. v. n. To spring out with speed and suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow.

This Puck seems but a dreaming dolt,
Still walking like a ragged colt,
And oft out of a bush doth bolt,
Of purpose to deceive us. Drayton.

They erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the forest, sometimes into the woods and fastnesses, and sometimes back to their den. Bacon.

As the house was all in a flame, out bolts a mouse from the ruins to save herself. L'Estrange.

I have reflected on those men who, from time to time, have shot themselves into the world. I have seen many successions of them: some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off. Dryden.

The birds to foreign seats repair'd;
And beasts, that bolted out, and saw the forest bar'd. Dryden.

BOLT-ROPE, bôlt'rôpe. n. s. [from bolt and rope.] The rope on which the sail of a ship is sewed and fastened. Sea Dict.

BO'LTER, bôlt'ûr. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sieve to separate meal from bran or husks; or to separate finer from coarser parts.

Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them. Shakspeare.

With a good strong chopping knife mince the two capons, bones and all, as small as ordinary minced meat; put them into a large neat bolter. Bacon.

When superciliously he sifts
Through coarsest bolter others gifts. Hudibras.

2. A kind of net.

These hakes, and divers others of the forecited, are taken with threads, and some of them with the bolter, which is a spiller of a bigger size. Carew.

BO'LTHEAD, bôlt'hêd. n. s. A long straight-necked glass vessel, for chymical distillations, called also a matrass, or receiver.

This spirit abounds in salt, which may be separated, by putting the liquor into a bolthead with a long narrow neck. Boyle.

BO'LTING-HOUSE, bôlt'ing-hôûse. n. s. [from bolt and house.] The place where meal is sifted.

The jade is returned as white, and as powdered, as if she had been at work in a bolting-house. Dennis.

BO'LTSPRIT, BO'WSPRIT, bô'sprît. n. s. A mast running out at the head of a ship, not standing upright, but aslope. The but end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the boltsprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Bowsprit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dict.

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards, and boltsprit, would I flame distinctly. Shakspeare.

BO'LUS, bô'lûs. n. s. [βόλος.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.

Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wiseman.

By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.

BOMB, bûm.[165] n. s. [bombus, Lat.]

1. A loud noise.

An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusee, or wooden tube filled with combustible matter, to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusee, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reaches the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence: whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain; some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon missive iron pours,
And in the slaught'ring bomb Gradivus roars. Rowe.

To BOMB, bûm. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur,
Whilst Villeroy, who ne'er afraid is,
To Bruxelles marches on secure,
To bomb the monks, and scare the ladies. Prior.

BOMB-CHEST, bûm'tshêst. n. s. [from bomb and chest.] A kind of chest filled usually with bombs, and sometimes only with gunpowder, placed under ground, to tear and blow it up in the air, with those who stand on it. Chambers.

BOMB-KETCH, BOMB-VESSEL, bûm'kêtsh, bûm'vês-sêl. n. s. A kind of ship, strongly built, to bear the shock of a mortar, when bombs are to be fired into a town.

Nor could an ordinary fleet, with bomb-vessels, hope to succeed against a place that has in its arsenal gallies and men of war. Addison on Italy.

BO'MBARD, bûm'bârd. n. s. [bombardus, Lat.]

1. A great gun; a cannon: it is a word now obsolete.

They planted in divers places twelve great bombards, wherewith they threw huge stones into the air, which, falling down into the city, might break down the houses. Knolles.

2. A barrel. Obsolete.

To BOMBA'RD, bûm-bârd'. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack with bombs.

A medal is struck on the English failing in their attempts on Dunkirk, when they endeavoured to blow up a fort, and bombard the town. Addison.

BOMBARDIER, bûm-bâr-dêêr'.[275] n. s. [from bombard.] The engineer whose employment is to shoot bombs.

The bombardier tosses his ball sometimes into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all around him with terrour and combustion. Tatler.

BOMBARDMENT, bûm-bârd'mênt. n. s. [from bombard.] An attack made upon any city, by throwing bombs into it.

Genoa is not yet secure from a bombardment, though it is not so exposed as formerly. Addison.

BOMBASI'N, bûm-bâ-zèèn'. n. s. [bombasin, Fr. from bombycinus, silken, Lat.] A slight silken stuff, for mourning.

BOMBA'ST, bûm'bâst. n. s. [A stuff of soft loose texture used formerly to swell the garment, and thence used to signify bulk or show without solidity.] Fustian; big words, without meaning.

Not pedants motley tongue, soldiers bombast,
Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough preparatives to draw
Me to hear this. Donne.

Are all the flights of heroick poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies? Dryd.

BO'MBAST, bûm-bâst'. adj. [from the substantive.] High sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance,
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war. Shaksp.

BOMBILA'TION, bûm-bû-là'shûn. n. s. [from bombus, Lat.] Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour, or silence the bombilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixt in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge. Brown.

BOMBY'CINOUS, bûm-bîs'sèn-ûs. adj. [bombycinus, Lat.] Silken; made of silk.

BONA ROBA, bô'nâ-rô'bâ. n. s. [Ital. a fine gown.] A shewy wanton.

We knew where the bona robas were. Shakspeare.

BONA'SUS, bô-nâ'sûs. n. s. [Lat.] A kind of buffalo, or wild bull.

BONCHRE'TIEN, bôn-krêt'tshèèn. n. s. [French.] A species of pear, so called, probably, from the name of a gardener.

BOND, bônd. n. s. [bonð, Sax. bound; it is written indifferently, in many of its senses, bond, or band. See BAND.]

1. Cords, or chains, with which any one is bound.

There left me, and my man, both bound together;
Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
I gain'd my freedom. Shakspeare.

2. Ligament that holds any thing together.

Let any one send his contemplation to the extremities of the universe, and see what conceivable hoops, what bond he can imagine, to hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together. Locke.

3. Union; connexion: a workman's term.

Observe, in working up the walls, that no side of the house, or any part of the walls, be brought up three feet above the other, before the next adjoining wall be wrought up to it, so that they may be all joined together, and make a good bond. Mortimer.

4. [In the plural.] Chains; imprisonment; captivity.

Whom I perceived to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death, or of bonds. Acts, xxiii. 29.

5. Cement of union; cause of union; link of connexion.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;
O blessed bond of board and bed! Shakspeare.

Love cools, brothers divide, and the bond is cracked 'twixt son and father Shaksp. King Lear.

6. A writing of obligation to pay a sum, or perform a contract.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond. Shakspeare.

What if I ne'er consent to make you mine;
My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date, they say, are void. Dryd.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond, no more nor less. Shaksp.

Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND, bônd'. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from ȝebonden, Saxon.] Captive; in a servile state.

Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free. 1 Corinthians, xii. 13.

BO'NDAGE, bôn'dâge.[90] n. s. [from bond.]

1. Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consists my glory. Sidney.

Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?
—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than is a slave in base servility. Shakspeare.

Our cage
We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

The king, when he design'd you for my guard,
Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard. Dryden.

2. Obligation; tye of duty.

If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way. Pope.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money. South.

BO'NDMAID, bônd'mâde. n. s. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself,
To make a bondmaid and a slave of me. Shakspeare.

BO'NDMAN, bônd'mân.[88] n. s. [from bond and man.] A man slave.

Amongst the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made? the master to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the publick magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker.

O freedom! first delight of human kind;
Not that which bondmen from their masters find. Dryden.

BONDSE'RVANT, bônd'sêr-vânt. n. s. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant. Leviticus.

BONDSE'RVICE, bônd'sêr-vîs. n. s. [from bond and service.] The condition of a bondservant; slavery.

Upon those did Solomon levy a tribute of bond-service. Kings.

BO'NDSLAVE, bônd'slâve. n. s. [from bond and slave.] A man in slavery; one of servile condition, who cannot change his master.

Love enjoined such diligence, that no apprentice, no, no bond-slave, could ever be, by fear, more ready at all commands than that young princess was. Sidney.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a free-woman she is become a bondslave. 1 Macc. ii. 11.

Commonly the bondslave is fed by his lord, but here the lord was fed by his bondslave. Sir J. Davies.

BO'NDSMAN, bônd'z'mân.[88] n. s. [from bond and man.]

1. A slave.

Carnal greedy people, without such a precept, would have no mercy upon their poor bondsmen and beasts. Derham.

2. A person bound, or giving security, for another.

BO'NDSWOMAN, bôndz'wûm-ûn. n. s. [from bond and woman.] A woman slave.

My lords, the senators
Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

BONE, bône. n. s. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The solid parts of the body of an animal, made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fœtus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells; or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been had it been solid and smaller. Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold. Macbeth.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Æsop's hounds contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone. Dryd.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.

Puss had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel. L'Estrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6. Bones. Dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky size:
To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away:
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

To BONE, bône. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as, the cooks boned the veal.

BO'NELACE, bône-lâse'. n. s. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace. Spectator.

Bo'NELESS, bône'lês. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluckt my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dasht the brains out. Shakspeare.

To Bo'NESET, bône'sêt. v. n. [from bone and set.] To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bonesetting. Wiseman's Surgery.

Bo'NESETTER, bône'sêt-tûr. n. s. [from boneset.] A chirurgeon; one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is to have a good bonesetter. Denham.

Bo'NFIRE, bôn'fire. n. s. [from bon good, Fr. and fire.] A fire made for some publick cause of triumph or exultation.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away,
And bonfires make all day. Spenser.

How came so many bonfires to be made in queen Mary's days? Why, she had abused and deceived her people. South.

Full soon by bonfire, and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.

Bo'NGRACE, bûn'grâs. n. s. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead. Not now used. Skinner.

I have seen her beset all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke, her bongrace, and chaplet. Hakewill on Providence.

Bo'NNET, bôn'nît[99] n. s. [bonet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,
And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them,
Thy knee bussing the stones; for, in such business,
Action is eloquence. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

They had not probably the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in their salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Addison.

Bo'NNET, bôn'nît. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the saliant angles of the glacis.

Bo'NNET à prestre, bôn'nît,[99] or priest's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three saliant angles, and two inwards.

Bo'NNETS, bôn-nîts'. [In the sea language.] Small sails set on the courses on the mizzen, mainsail, and foresail of a ship, when these are too narrow or shallow to clothe the mast, or in order to make more way in calm weather. Chambers.

Bo'NNILY, bôn'nê-lê. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handsomely; plumply.

Bo'NNINESS, bôn'nê-nês. n. s. [from bonny.] Gayety; handsomeness; plumpness.

BO'NNY, bôn'nê. adj. [from bon, bonne, Fr. It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect.]

1. Handsome; beautiful.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows
Ev'n of the bonny beast he lov'd so well. Shaksp.

Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain,
Till bonny Susan sped across the plain. Gay.

2. Gay; merry; frolicksome; cheerful; blithe.

Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny. Shaksp.

3. It seems to be generally used in conversation for plump.

Bo'NNY-CLABBER, bôn-nê-klâb'bûr. n. s. A word used in Ireland for sour buttermilk.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;
Nor are we studious to enquire,
Who votes for manors, who for hire. Swift.

BO'NUM MAGNUM, bô'nûm-mâg'nûm. n. s. A species of plum.

Bo'NY, bô'nê. adj. [from bone.]

1. Consisting of bones.

At the end of this hole is a membrane, fastened to a round bony limb, and stretched like the head of a drum; and therefore, by anatomists, called tympanum. Ray.

2. Full of bones.

Bo'OBY, bôô'bê. n. s. [a word of no certain etymology. Henshaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef, ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from bobo foolish, Spanish. Junius finds bowbard to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby: but the original of bowbard is not known.] A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find;
That booby Phaon only was unkind,
An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind. Prior.

Young master next must rise to fill him wine,
And starve himself to see the booby dine. King.

BOOK, bôôk. n. s. [boc, Sax. supposed from boc a beech, because they wrote on beechen boards; as liber, in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write.

See a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shakspeare.

Receive the sentence of the law for sins,
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death. Shaks.

In the coffin that had the books, they were found as fresh as if they had been but newly written; being written on parchment, and covered over with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts: this is properly the work of a living instructor. Watts.

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; whereof the first is these chapters past. Burnet's Theory.

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

This life
Is nobler than attending for a bauble;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk;
Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd. Shakspeare.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.

I was so much in his books, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Addison.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading.

Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their birth, and may have public audience but once. Hooker.

To BOOK, bôôk. v. a. [from the noun.] To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it. Shakspeare.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer. Davies on Ireland.

BOOK-KEEPING, bôôk'kêêp-ing. n. s. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording pecuniary transactions, in such a manner, that at any time a man may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Harris.

Bo'OKBINDER, bôôk'bîn-dûr. n. s. [from book and bind.] A man whose profession it is to cover books.

Bo'OKFUL, bôôk'fûl. adj. [from book and full.] Full of notions gleaned from books; crowded with undigested knowledge.

The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
And always list'ning to himself appears. Pope.

Bo'OKISH, bôôk'îsh. adj. [from book.] Given to books; acquainted only with books. It is generally used contemptuously.

I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down. Shakspeare.

I'm not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the 'scape. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

Xantippe follows her namesake; being married to a bookish man, who has no knowledge of the world. Spectator.

Bo'OKISHNESS, bôôk'îsh-nês. n. s. [from bookish.] Much application to books; overstudiousness.

BOOKLE'ARNED, bôôk'lêrn-êd. adj. [from book and learned.] Versed in books or literature: a term implying some slight contempt.

Whate'er these booklearn'd blockheads say,
Solon 's the veriest fool in all the play. Dryden.

He will quote passages out of Plato and Pindar, at his own table, to some booklearned companion, without blushing. Swift.

BOOKLE'ARNING, bôôk'lêrn-îng. n. s. [from book and learning.] Skill in literature; acquaintance with books: a term of some contempt.

They might talk of booklearning what they would, but he never saw more unfeaty fellows than great clerks. Sidney.

Neither does it so much require booklearning and scholarship, as good natural sense, to distinguish true and false, and to discern what is well proved, and what is not. Burnet's Theory.

Bo'OKMAN, bôôk'mân.[88] n. s. [from book and man.] A man whose profession is the study of books.

This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his bookmen; for here 'tis abus'd. Shakspeare.

Bo'OKMATE, bôôk'mâte. n. s. [from book and mate.] Schoolfellow.

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court,
A phantasm, a monarch, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his bookmates. Shakspeare.

Bo'OKSELLER, bôôk'sêl-lûr. n. s. [from book and sell.] He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookseller, and told him in anger, he had sold a book in which there was false divinity. Walton.

Bo'OKWORM, bôôk'wûrm. n. s. [from book and worm.]

1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to diet him with wholesome and substantial food. Guardian.

When we are born, we cry, that we are come
To this great stage of fools. Shakspeare.
The new born babe by nurses overlaid. Dryd.
Nor nature's law with fruitless sorrow mourn,
But die, O mortal man! for thou wast born. Prior.
All that are born into the world are surrounded with bodies, that perpetually and diversly affect them. Locke.

2. It is usually spoken with regard to circumstances: as, he was born a prince; he was born to empire: he was born for greatness: that is, formed at the birth.

The stranger, that dwelleth with you, shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself. Leviticus, xix. 34.
Yet man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job.
A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity. Proverbs.
Either of you knights may well deserve
A princess born; and such is she you serve. Dryd.
Two rising crests his royal head adorn;
Born from a god, himself to godhead born. Dryd.
Both must alike from heav'n derive their light;
These born to judge, as well as those to write. Pope.
For all mankind alike require their grace;
All born to want; a miserable race! Pope.
I was born to a good estate, although it now turneth to little account. Swift.
Their lands are let to lords, who, never designed to be tenants, naturally murmur at the payment of rents, as a subserviency they were not born to. Swift.

3. It has usually the particle of before the mother.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man; for none of woman born
Shall harm Macbeth. Shakspeare.
I being born of my father's first wife, and she of his third, she converses with me rather like a daughter than a sister. Tatler.

Bo'rough, bůr'rò.[318 390] n. s. [borhoe, Saxon.]

1. It signified anciently a surety, or a man bound for others.

A borough, as I here use it, and as the old laws still use, is not a borough town, that is, a franchised town; but a main pledge of an hundred free persons, therefore called a free borough, or, as you say francplegium. For borth, in old Saxon, signifieth a pledge or surety: and yet it is so used with us in some speeches, as Chaucer saith, St. John to Boroh; that is, for assurance and warranty. Spenser.

2. A town with a corporation.

And if a borough chuse him not undone. Pope.

Bo'rough English, bůr'rò.[318 390] is a customary descent of lands or tenements, whereby, in all places where this custom holds, lands and tenements descend to the youngest son; or, if the owner have no issue, to his youngest brother. Cowell.

Bo'rrel, bŏr'rĭl.[99] n. s. [it is explained by Junius without etymology.] A mean fellow.

Siker thou speak'st like a lewd sorrel,
Of heaven to deemen so:
Howbe I am but rude and borrel,
Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser.

To BO'RROW, bŏr'rò. v. a. [borgen, Dutch; borgian, Sax.]

1. To take something from another upon credit: opposed to lend.

He borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again when he was able. Shakspeare.
We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards. Nehemiah.

2. To ask of another the use of something for a time.

Then he said, go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours. 2 Kings.
Where darkness and surprise made conquest cheap!
Where virtue borrowed the arms of chance,
And struck a random blow! Dryd.

3. To take something belonging to another.

A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear;
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king? Shaksp.
They may borrow something of instruction even from their past guilt. Decay of Piety.
I was engaged in the translation of Virgil, from whom I have borrowed only two months. Dryden.
These verbal signs they sometimes borrow from others, and sometimes make themselves; as one may observe among the new names children give to things. Locke.
Some persons of bright parts have narrow remembrance; for, having riches of their own, they are not solicitous to borrow. Watts.

4. To use as one's own, though not belonging to one.

Unkind and cruel, to deceive your son
In borrow'd shapes, and his embrace to shun. Dryd.

Bo'rrow, bŏr'rò. n. s. [from the verb.] The thing borrowed.

Yet of your royal presence I'll adventure
The borrow of a week. Shakspeare.

Bo'rrower, bŏr'rò-ůr. n. s. [from borrow.]

1. He that borrows; he that takes money upon trust; opposed to lender.

His talk is of nothing but of his poverty, for fear belike lest I should have proved a young borrower. Sidney.
Neither a borrower nor a lender be;
For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry. Shakspeare.
Go not my horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the night
For a dark hour or twain. Shaksp.
But you invert the cov'nants of her trust,
And harshly deal, like an ill borrower,
With that which you receiv'd on other terms. Milton.

2. He that takes what is another's, and uses it as his own.

Some say, that I am a great borrower; however, none of my creditors have challenged me for it. Pope.

Bo'scage, bŏs'kåje.[90] n. s. [boscage, Fr.]

1. Wood, or woodlands.

We bent our course thither, where we saw the appearance of land; and, the next day, we might plainly discern that it was land flat to our sight, and full of boscage, which made it shew the more dark. Bacon.

2. The representation of woods.

Cheerful paintings in feasting and banqueting rooms; graver stories in galleries; landskips and boscage, and such wild works, in open terraces, or summer houses. Wotton.

Bo'sky, bŏs'kė. adj. [bosque, Fr.] Woody.

And with each end of thy blue bow dost crown
My bosky acres, and my unshrubb'd down. Shaksp.
I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle, or bushy dell, of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn from side to side. Milton.

BO'SOM, bŏŏ'zům. n. s. [bopme, bopom, Sax.]

1. The embrace of the arms holding any thing to the breast.

2. The breast; the heart.

Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses. Shaksp.

3. The folds of the dress that cover the breast.

Put now thy hand into thy bosom; and he put his hand into his bosom: and when he took it out, behold his hand was leprous as snow. Exodus, iv. 6.

4. Inclosure; compass; embrace.

Unto laws thus received by a whole church, they which live within the bosom of that church, must not think it a matter indifferent, either to yield, or not to yield, obedience. Hooker.

5. The breast, as the seat of the passions.

Anger resteth in the bosoms of fools. Eccles.
From jealousy's tormenting strife
For ever be thy bosom freed. Prior.
Unfortunate Fallard! O, who can name
The pangs of rage, of sorrow, and of shame,
That with mix'd tumult in thy bosom swell'd,
When first thou saw'st thy bravest troops repell'd! Addison.
Here acting bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play. Young.

6. The breast, as the seat of tenderness.

Their soul was poured out into their mother's bosom. Lamentations.
No further seek his virtues to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode;
There they alike in trembling hope repose,
The bosom of his father and his God. Gray.

7. The breast, as the receptacle of secrets.

If I covered my transgression as Adam, by hiding my iniquity in my bosom. Job.

8. Any receptacle close or secret; as, the bosom of the earth; the bosom of the deep.

9. The tender affections; kindness; favour.

Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosoms on his side. Shaksp.
To whom the great Creator thus reply'd:
O Son, in whom my soul hath chief delight,
Son of my bosom, Son who art alone
My word, my wisdom, and effectual might. Paradise Lost.

10. Inclination; desire. Not used.

If you can place your wisdom
In that good path that I could wish it go,
You shall have your bosom on this wretch. Shaksp.

Bo'som, bŏŏ'zům, in composition, implies intimacy; confidence; fondness.

No more that Thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our bosom-interest; go, pronounce his death. Shak.

Fairy Queen.

BO'UNTY, bǒůn'tè. n. s. [bonté, Fr.]

1. Generosity; liberality; munificence.

We do not so far magnify her exceeding bounty, as to affirm, that she bringeth into the world the sons of men, adorned with gorgeous attire. Hooker.

If you knew to whom you shew this honour,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shaksp.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
That thou may'st nothing give that is not thine.
Denham.

Those godlike men, to wanting virtue kind,
Bounty well plac'd, preferr'd, and well design'd,
To all their titles. Dryden.

2. It seems distinguished from charity, as a present from an alms; being used when persons, not absolutely necessitous, receive gifts; or when gifts are given by great persons.

Tell a miser of bounty to a friend, or mercy to the poor, and he will not understand it. South.

Her majesty did not see this assembly so proper to excite charity and compassion; though I question not but her royal bounty will extend itself to them.
Addison.

To BO'URGEON, bůr'jůn.[313 289] v. n. [bourgeonner, Fr.] To sprout; to shoot into branches; to put forth buds.

Long may the dew of heaven distil upon them, to make them bourgeon and propagate among themselves. Howel.

O that I had the fruitful heads of Hydra,
That one might bourgeon where another fell!
Still would I give thee work. Dryden.

BOURN, bŏrne. n. s. [borne, Fr.]

1. A bound; a limit.

Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none. Shakspeare.

That undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns. Shakspeare.

False,
As dice are to be wish'd by one that fixes
No bourn 'twixt his and mine. Shakspeare.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
And every bosky bourn from side to side. Milton.

2. [From burn, Saxon.] A brook; a torrent: whence many towns, seated near brooks, have names ending in bourn. It is not now used in either sense; though the second continues in the Scottish dialect

Ne swelling Neptune, ne loud thund'ring Jove,
Can change my cheer, or make me ever mourn:
My little boat can safely pass this perilous bourn. Spenser.

To BOUSE, bŏŏze. v.n. [buysen, Dutch.] To drink lavishly; to tope.

To BOW, bŏŭ. v. a. [buzen, Saxon.]

1. To bend, or inflect. It sounds as now, or how.

A threepence bow'd would hire me
Old as I am, to queen it. Shakspeare.

Orpheus, with his lute, made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakspeare.

Some bow the vines, which bury'd in the plain,
Their tops in distant arches rise again. Dryden.

The mind has not been made obedient to discipline, when at first it was most tender and most easy to be bowed. Locke.

2. To bend the body in token of respect or submission.

They came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him. 2 Kings.

Is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord? Isaiah.

3. To bend, or incline, in condescension.

Let it not grieve thee to bow down thine ear to the poor, and give him a friendly answer. Ecclus.

4. To depress; to crush.

Are you so gospell'd,
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever? Shakspeare.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes may bow me to the ground. Pope.

To Bow, bŏŭ. v. n.

1. To bend; to suffer flexure.

To shun my house, and field, and grove;
Peace cannot dwell with hate or love. Prior.

8. Warlike preparation; from bracing the armour; as we say, girded for the battle.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks th' abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakspeare.

9. Tension; tightness.

The most frequent cause of deafness is the laxness of the tympanum, when it has lost its brace or tension. Holder.

Brace, brâse. n. s. [of uncertain etymology, probably derived from two braced together.]

1. A pair; a couple. It is not braces, but brace, in the plural.

Down from a hill the beasts that reign in woods,
First hunter then, pursued a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Par. Lost.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair. Dryden's Fables.

2. It is used generally in conversation as a sportsman's word.

He is said, this summer, to have shot with his own hands fifty brace of pheasants. Addison.

3. It is applied to men in contempt.

But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you. Shakspeare.

Bra'celet, brâse'lėt. n. s. [bracelet, Fr.]

1. An ornament for the arms.

Both his hands were cut off, being known to have worn bracelets of gold about his wrists. Hayward.

Brachy'graphy, brâ-kĭg'grâ-fė.[363] n. s. [βραχὺς short, and γράφω to write.] The art or practice of writing in a short compass.

All the certainty of those high pretenders, bating what they have of the first principles, and the word of God, may be circumscribed by as small a circle as the creed, when brachygraphy had confined it within the compass of a penny. Granville.

Brack, brâk'. n. s. [from break.] A breach; a broken part.

The place was but weak, and the bracks fair; but the defendants, by resolution, supplied all the defects. Hayward.

Let them compare my work with what is taught in the schools, and if they find in theirs many bracks and short ends, which cannot be spun into an even piece; and, in mine, a fair coherence throughout; I shall promise myself an acquiescence. Digby.

Bra'cket, brâk'kĭt.[99] n. s. [a term of carpentry.] A piece of wood fixed for the support of something.

Let your shelves be laid upon brackets, being about two feet wide, and edged with a small lath. Mortimer.

BRA'CKISH, brâk'ĭsh. adj. [brack, Dutch.] Salt; somewhat salt: it is used particularly of the water of the sea.

Pits upon the sea shore turn into fresh water, by percolation of the salt through the sand: but it is farther noted, after a time, the water in such pits will become brackish again. Bacon.

When I had gain'd the brow and top,
A lake of brackish waters on the ground
Was all I found. Herbert.

The wise contriver, on his end intent,
Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea.
What other cause could this effect produce?
The brackish tincture through the main diffuse? Blackmore.

Bra'ckishness, brâk'ĭsh-nės. n. s. [from brackish.] Saltness in a small degree.

All the artificial strainings hitherto leave a brackishness in salt water, that makes it unfit for animal uses. Cheyne.

BRAD, brâd, being an initial, signifies broad, spacious, from the Saxon bnaƀ, and the Gothick braid. Gibson.

Brad, brâd. n. s. A sort of nail to floor rooms with. They are about the size of a tenpenny nail, but have not their heads made with a shoulder over their shank, as other nails, but are made pretty thick towards the upper end, that the very top may be driven into, and buried in, the board they nail down; so that the tops of these brads will not catch the thrums of the mops, when the floor is washing. Moxon.

To BRAG, brâg. v. n. [braggeren, Dutch.]

1. To boast: to display ostentatiously; to tell boastful stories.

Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars?
Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
And wilt not come? Shakspeare.

Mark me, with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies. Shakspeare.

In bragging out some of their private tenets, as if they were the established doctrine of the church of England. Sanderson.

The rebels were grown so strong there, that they intended then, as they already bragged, to come over and make this the seat of war. Clarendon.

Mrs. Bull's condition was looked upon as desperate by all the men of art; but there were those that bragged they had an infallible ointment. Arbuthnot.

2. It has of before the thing boasted.

Knowledge being the only thing whereof we poor old men can brag, we cannot make it known but by utterance. Sidney.

Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well-governed youth. Shaksp.
Every busy little scribbler now
Swells with the praises which he gives himself,
And taking sanctuary in the crowd,
Brags of his impudence, and scorns to mend.
Roscommon.

3. On is used, but improperly.

Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on,
Reduc'd at last to hiss in my own dragon. Pope.

BRAG, brâg. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A boast; a proud expression.

A kind of conquest
Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag
Of came, and saw, and overcame. Shakspeare.
It was such a new thing for the Spaniards to receive so little hurt, upon dealing with the English, as Avellaneda made great brags of it, for no greater matter than the waiting upon the English afar off. Bacon.

2. The thing boasted.

Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shown
In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities,
Where most may wonder. Milton.

BRAGGADO'CIO, brâg-gâ-dō'shē-ō. n. s. [from brag.] A puffing, swelling, boasting fellow.

The world abounds in terrible fanfarons, in the masque of men of honour; but these braggadocios are easy to be detected. L'Estrange.
By the plot, you may guess much of the characters of the persons; a braggadocio captain, a parasite, and a lady of pleasure. Dryden.

BRA'GGARDISM, brâg'gâr-dizm. n. s. [from brag.] Boastfulness; vain ostentation.

BRA'GGART, brâg'gârt.[88] adj. [from brag.] Boastful; vainly ostentatious.

Shall I, none's slave, of high born or rais'd men
Fear frowns; and my mistress, truth, betray thee
To th' huffing, braggart, puft nobility? Donne.

BRA'GGART, brâg'gârt. n. s. [from brag.] A boaster.

Who knows himself a braggart,
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggart shall be found an ass. Shaksp.

BRA'GGER, brâg'gûr.[98] n. s. [from brag.] A boaster; an ostentatious fellow.

Such as have had opportunity to sound these braggers thoroughly, by having sometimes endured the penance of their sottish company, have found them, in converse, empty and insipid. South.

BRA'GLESS, brâg'lês. adj. [from brag.] Without a boast; without ostentation.

The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.—
——If it is so, bragless let it be,
Great Hector was as good a man as he. Shaksp.

BRA'GLY, brâg'lê. adv. [from brag.] Finely; so as it may be bragged.

Seest not thilk hawthorn stud,
How bragly it begins to bud,
And utter his tender head?
Flora now calleth forth each flower,
And bids him make ready Maia's bow'r. Spenser.

To BRAID, brâde. v. a. [þnædan, Saxon.] To weave together.

Close the serpent sly,
Insinuating, wove with gordian twine
His braided train, and of his fatal guile
Gave proof unheeded. Milton.
Osier wands, lying loosely, may each of them be easily dissociated from the rest; but, when braided into a basket, they cohere strongly. Boyle.
A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind. Dryd.
Since in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long trailing manteau sweeps the ground,
Her shoe disdains the street. Gay.

BRAID, brâde. n. s. [from the verb.] A texture; a knot, or complication of something woven together.

Listen where thou art sitting,
Under the glossy, cool, translucent wave,
In twisted braids of lilies knitting
The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair. Milton.
No longer shall thy comely tresses break
In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck,
Or sit behind thy head, an ample round,
In graceful braids, with various ribbon bound. Prior.

BRAID, brâde, adj. [To brede, in Chaucer, is to deceive.] An old word, which seems to signify deceitful.

Since Frenchmen are so braid,
Marry 'em that will. I'll live and die a maid. Shaks.

BRAILS, brâlz. n. s. [sea term.] Small ropes reeved through blocks, which are seized on either side the ties, a little off upon the yard; so that they come down before the sails of a ship, and are fastened at the skirt of the sail to the crengles. Their use is, when the sail is furled across, to hale up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken up or let fall. Harris.

BRAIN, brâne. n. s. [þnæzen, Sax. breyne, Dutch.]

1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebellum. Cerebrum is that part of the brain which possesses all the upper and forepart of the cranium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater, under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the brain is distinguished into outer and inner; the former is called corticalis, cinerea, or glandulosa; the latter, medullaris, alba, or nervea. Cheselden.
If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift. Shakspeare.
That man proportionably hath the largest brain, I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large cranies, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes and woodcocks; but, upon trial, I find it very true. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one but in their brains, the other on their shoulders. Hammond.
A man is first a geometrician in his brain, before he be such in his hand. Hale.

3. Sometimes the affections: this is not common, nor proper.

My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this, a heart and brain to breed it in? Shakspeare.

To BRAIN, brâne. v. a. [from the noun.] To dash out the brains; to kill by beating out the brains.

Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him i' th' afternoon to sleep; there thou may'st brain him. Shakspeare.
Outlaws of nature,
Fit to be shot and brain'd, without a process,
To stop infection; that's their proper death. Dryd.
Next seiz'd two wretches more, and headlong cast,
Brain'd on the rock, his second dire repast. Pope.

BRA'INISH, brâne'ish. adj. [from brain.] Hot-headed; furious; as cerebrosus in Latin.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And, in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man. Shakspeare.

BRA'INLESS, brâne'lês. adj. [from brain.] Silly; thoughtless; witless.

Some brainless men have, by great travel and labour, brought to pass, that the church is now ashamed of nothing more than of saints. Hooker.
If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices. Shakspeare.
The brainless stripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damn'd the stiff college and pedantick gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb. Tickell.

BRA'INPAN, brâne'pân. n. s. [from brain and pan.] The skull containing the brains.

With those huge bellows in his hands, he blows,
New fire into my head; my brainpan glows. Dryd.

BRA'INSICK, brâne'sîk. adj. [from brain and sick.] Diseased in the understanding: addle-headed; giddy; thoughtless.

Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad; her brainsick raptures
Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel. Shaksp.
They were brainsick men, who could neither endure the government of their king, nor yet thankfully receive the authors of their deliverance. Knolles.

BRA'INSICKLY, brâne'sîk-lê. adv. [from brainsick.] Weakly; headily.

Why, worthy Thane,
You do unbend your noble strength to think
So brainsickly of things. Shakspeare.

BRAKE, brâke. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. A thicket of brambles, or of thorns.

A dog of this town used daily to fetch meat, and to carry the same unto a blind mastiff, that lay in a brake without the town. Carew.
If I'm traduc'd by tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor person; let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakspeare.
In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping. Milton.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Who, flying death, had there conceal'd his flight;
In brakes and brambles hid, and shunning mortal sight. Dryden's Fables.

2. It is said originally to mean fern.

BRAKE, brâke. n. s.

1. An instrument for dressing hemp or flax.
2. The handle of a ship's pump.

BRA'KY, brâ'kê. adj. [from brake.] Thorny; prickly; rough;

Redeem arts from their rough and braky seats, where they lie hid and overgrown with thorns, to a pure, open light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand. Ben Jonson.

BRA'MBLE, brâm'bl.[405] n. s. [þnemlaz, Sax. rubus, Lat.]

1. The blackberry bush; the raspberry bush, or hindberry. Miller.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed:
Cornels and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bow'r,
The woods can witness many a woful store. Spenser.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. Shaksp.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No thrustles shrill the bramble bush forsake. Gay.

BRA'MBLING, brâm'bling. n. s. A bird, called also a mountain chaffinch. Dict.

BRAN, brân. n. s. [brenna, Ital.] The husks of corn ground; the refuse of the sieve.

From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakspeare.

The citizens were driven to great distress for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarsest bran, moulded in cloths; for otherwise it would not cleave together. Hayward.

In the sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal, but must have among it a certain mixture of padar and bran, in this lower age of human fragility. Wotton.

Then water him, and drinking what he can,
Encourage him to thirst again with bran. Dryden.

BRANCH, brântsh.[353] [78] n. s. [branche, Fr.]

1. The shoot of a tree from one of the main boughs.

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?
Why wither not the leaves that want their sap?
Shakspeare.

2. Any member or part of the whole; any distinct article; any section or subdivision.

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,
That his own hand may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein. Shaksp.

The belief of this was of special importance, to confirm our hopes of another life, on which so many branches of christian piety do immediately depend. Hammond.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in those general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable. Tillotson.

This precept will oblige us to perform our duty, according to the nature of the various branches of it. Rogers.

3. Any part that shoots out from the rest.

And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side. Exodus.

His blood, which disperseth itself by the branches of veins, may be resembled to waters carried by brooks. Raleigh.

4. A smaller river running into, or proceeding from, a larger.

If, from a main river, any branch be separated and divided, then, where that branch doth first bound itself with new banks, there is that part of the river, where the branch forsaketh the main stream, called the head of the river. Raleigh.

5. Any part of a family descending in a collateral line.

9. [In architecture.] The arches of Gothick vaults; which arches transversing from one angle to another, diagonal wise, form a cross between the other arches, which make the sides of the square, of which the arches are diagonals. Harris.

To BRANCH, brântsh. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.

They were trained together in their childhoods, and there rooted betwixt them such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Shakspeare.

The cause of scattering the boughs, is the hasty breaking forth of the sap; and therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the pyramis, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it when it beginneth to branch, by equal degrees. Bacon.

Plant it round with shade
Of laurel, evergreen, and branching plane. Milton.

Straight as a line in beauteous order stood
Of oaks unshorn a venerable wood;
Fresh was the grass beneath, and ev'ry tree
At distance planted, in a due degree,
Their branching arms in air, with equal space,
Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace.
Dryden.

One sees her thighs transform'd, another views
Her arms shot out, and branching into boughs.
Addison.

2. To spread into separate and distinct parts and subdivisions.

The Alps at the one end, and the long range of Appenines that passes through the body of it, branch out, on all sides, into several different divisions. Addison.

If we would weigh, and keep in our minds, what it is we are considering, that would best instruct us when we should, or should not, branch into farther distinctions. Locke.

From brassy bosoms, and rough hearts of flint.
Shaksp.

3. Impudent.

BRAST, brâst. particip. adj. [from burst.] Burst; broken. Obsolete.

There creature never past,
That back returned without heavenly grace,
But dreadful furies which their chains have brast,
And damned sprights sent forth to make ill men agast. Spenser.

BRAT, brât. n. s. [its etymology is uncertain; bnaꝛꝛ, in Saxon, signifies a blanket; from which, perhaps, the modern signification may have come.]

1. A child, so called in contempt.

He leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better; and they follow him,
Against us brats, with no less confidence,
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies. Shaksp.

This brat is none of mine:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shaksp.

The friends, that got the brats, were poison'd too;
In this sad case what could our vermin do?
Roscommon.

Jupiter summoned all the birds and beasts before him, with their brats and little ones, to see which of them had the prettiest children. L'Estrange.

I shall live to see the invisible lady, to whom I was obliged, and whom I never beheld since she was a brat in hanging sleeves. Swift.

Whither are they vanish'd?
Into the air, and what seem'd corporal
Melted, as breath into the wind. Shaks. Macbeth.

2. Life.

No man has more contempt than I of breath;
But whence hast thou the pow'r to give me death?
Dryden.

3. The state or power of breathing freely; opposed to the condition in which a man is breathless and spent.

At other times, he casts to sue the chace
Of swift wild beasts, or run on foot a race,
T' enlarge his breath, large breath in arms most needful,
Or else, by wrestling, to wax strong and heedful.
Spenser.

What is your difference? speak.—
—I am scarce in breath, my Lord. Shak. K. Lear.

Spaniard, take breath; some respite I'll afford;
My cause is more advantage than your sword.
Dryden.

Our swords so wholly did the fates employ,
That they, at length, grew weary to destroy;
Refus'd the work we brought, and out of breath,
Made sorrow and despair attend for death.
Dryden's Aureng.

4. Respite; pause; relaxation.

Give me some breath, some little pause, dear lord,
Before I positively speak. Shakspeare.

5. Breeze; moving air.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface.
Addison's Cato.

6. A single act; an instant.

You menace me, and court me, in a breath;
Your Cupid looks as dreadfully as death. Dryd.

BRE'ATHABLE, brêthe'â-bl. adj. [from breath.] That may be breathed; as, breathable air.

To BREATHE, brêthe.[437] v. n. [from breath.]

A statue than a breather. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

I will chide no breather in the world but myself.
Shakspeare.

2. One that utters any thing.

No particular scandal once can touch,
But it confounds the breather. Shakspeare.

3. Inspirer; one that animates or infuses by inspiration.

The breather of all life does now expire;
His milder father summons him away. Norris.

BRE'ATHING, brê'thing. n. s. [from breathe.]

1. Aspiration; secret prayer.

While to high heav'n his pious breathings turn'd,
Weeping he hop'd, and sacrificing mourn'd. Prior.

2. Breathing place; vent;

The warmth distends the chinks, and makes
New breathings, whence new nourishment she takes.
Dryden.

BRE'ATHLESS, brêth'lês. adj. [from breath.]

1. Out of breath; spent with labour.

Well knew
The prince, with patience and sufferance sly,
So hasty heat soon cooled to subdue;
Tho' when he breathless wax, that battle 'gan renew.
Fairy Queen.

I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage and extreme toil,
Breathless, and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord. Shaks. Henry IV.

Many so strained themselves in their race, that they fell down breathless and dead. Hayward.

Breathless and tir'd, is all my fury spent?
Or does my glutted spleen at length relent? Dryd.

2. Dead.

Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life,
And breathing to this breathless excellence
The incense of a vow, a holy vow. Shakspeare.

Yielding to the sentence, breathless thou
And pale shalt lie, as what thou buriest now. Prior.

BRED, brêd. particip. pass. [from To breed.]

Their malice was bred in them, and their cogitation would never be changed. Wisdom, xii. 10.

BREDE, brêde. n. s. See BRAID.

In a curious brede of needle-work, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety, without being able to distinguish the total vanishing of the one from the first appearance of the other. Addison

BREECH, brêêtsh.[247] n. s. [supposed from bnæcan, Sax.]

1. The lower part of the body; the back part.

When the king's pardon was offered by a herauld, a lewd boy turned towards him his naked breech, and used words suitable to that gesture.
Hayward.

The storks devour snakes and other serpents; which when they begin to creep out at their breeches, they will presently clap them close to a wall, to keep them in. Grew's Musæum.

2. Breeches.

Ah! that thy father had been so resolv'd—
—That thou might'st still have worn the petticoat,
And ne'er had stol'n the breech from Lancaster.
Shaksp.

3. The hinder part of a piece of ordnance.

So cannons, when they mount vast pitches,
Are tumbled back upon their breeches. Anonymous.

The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind. Pope.

7. Illustrious; glorious.

This is the worst, if not the only stain,
I' th' brightest annals of a female reign. Cotton.

To* Bri'ghten, brî'tn.[103] v. a. [from bright.]

1. To make bright; to make to shine.

The purple morning, rising with the year,
Salutes the spring, as her celestial eyes
Adorn the world, and brighten up the skies. Dryd.

2. To make luminous by light from without.

An ecstacy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart, and brightens all my sorrow,
Like gleams of sunshine in a louring sky. Philips.

3. To make gay, or cheerful.

Hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To make illustrious.

The present queen would brighten her character, if she would exert her authority to instil virtues into her people. Swift.

Yet time ennobles or degrades each line;
It brighten'd Craggs's, and may darken thine. Pope.

5. To make acute, or witty.

To BRI'GHTEN, brī'tn. v. n. To grow bright; to clear up: as, the sky brightens.

But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the stile brightens, how the sense refines! Pope.

BRI'GHTLY, brīte'lē. adv. [from bright.] Splendidly; with lustre.

Safely I slept, till brightly dawning shone
The morn, conspicuous on her golden throne. Pope.

BRI'GHTNESS, brīte'nēs. n. s. [from bright.]

1. Lustre; splendour; glitter.

The blazing brightness of her beauty's beam,
And glorious light of her sun-shining face,
To tell, were as to strive against the stream. Fairy Q.

A sword, by long lying still, will contract a rust, which shall deface its brightness. South.

The moon put on her veil of light,
Mysterious veil, of brightness made,
That's both her lustre and her shade. Hudibras.

Vex'd with the present moment's heavy gloom,
Why seek we brightness from the years to come?
Prior.

2. Acuteness.

The brightness of his parts, the solidity of his judgment, and the candour and generosity of his temper, distinguish him in an age of great politeness. Prior.

BRI'LLIANT, brīl'yānt.[113] adj. [brillant, Fr.] Shining; sparkling; splendid; full of lustre.

So have I seen in larder dark,
Of veal a lucid loin,
Replete with many a brilliant spark,
As wise philosophers remark,
At once both stink and shine. Dorset.

BRI'LLIANT, brīl'yānt. n. s. A diamond of the finest cut, formed into angles, so as to refract the light, and shine more.

In deference to his virtues, I forbear
To show you what the rest in orders were;
This brilliant is so spotless and so bright,
He needs not foil, but shines by his own proper light.
Dryden.

BRI'LLIANTNESS, brīl'yānt-nēs. n. s. [from brilliant.] Splendour; lustre.

BRILLS, brīlz. n. s. The hair on the eyelids of a horse. Dict.

It told me it was Cynthia's own,
Within whose cheerful brims
That curious nymph had oft been known
To bathe her snowy limbs. Drayton.

To BRIM, brīm. v. a. [from the noun.] To fill to the top.

May thy brimmed waves for this,
Their full tribute never miss,
From a thousand rills. Milton.

This said, a double wreath Evander twin'd;
And poplars black and white his temples bind;
Then brims his ample bowl; with like design,
The rest invoke the gods with sprinkled wine. Dryd.

To BRIM, brīm. v. n. To be full to the brim.

Now horrid frays
Commence, the brimming glasses now are hurl'd
With dire intent. Philips.

BRI'MFUL, brīm'fūl. adj. [from brim and full.] Full to the top; overcharged.

Measure my case, how by thy beauty's filling
With seed of woes my heart brimful is charg'd.
Sidney.

We have try'd the utmost of our friends;
Our legions are brimful, our cause is ripe. Shaksp.

Her brimful eyes, that ready stood,
And only wanted will to weep a flood,
Releas'd their watery store. Dryden.

The good old king at parting wrung my hand,
His eyes brimful of tears; then sighing cry'd,
Prithee, be careful of my son. Addison.

BRI'MFULNESS, brīm'fūl-nēs. n. s. [from brimful.] Fulness to the top.

The Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom

And strike the brindled monster to the heart. Addis.

BRINE, brīne. n. s.

1. Water impregnated with salt.

The encreasing of the weight of water will encrease its power of bearing; as we see brine, when it is salt enough, will bear an egg. Bacon.

Dissolve sheeps dung in water, and add to it as much salt as will make a strong brine; in this liquor steep your corn. Mortimer.

2. The sea, as it is salt.

All but mariners,
Plung'd in the foaming brine, did quit the vessel,
Then all afire with me. Shakspeare.

The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panope, with all her sisters, play'd. Milton.

As, when two adverse winds
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine
Roars stormy. Philips.

3. Tears, as they are salt.

What a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline! Shaks.

BRI'NEPIT, brīne'pīt. n. s. [from brine and pit.] Pit of salt water.

Then I lov'd thee,
And shew'd thee all the qualities o' th' isle,
The fresh springs, brinepits, barren place, and fertile. Shakspeare.

To BRING, brīng.[408 409] v. a. [bpingan, Sax. preter. I brought; part. pass. brought: bpoht, Sax.]

1. To fetch from another place: distinguished from to carry, or convey, to another place.

I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again. Shaksp.

And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thy hand. Kings.

A registry of lands may furnish easy securities of money, that shall be brought over by strangers. Temple.

2. To convey in one's own hand; not to send by another.

And if my wish'd alliance please your king,
Tell him he should not send the peace, but bring.
Dryden.

3. To produce; to procure, as a cause.

There is nothing will bring you more honour, and more ease, than to do what right in justice you may. Bacon.

4. To reduce; to recal.

Bring back gently their wandering minds, by going before them in the train they should pursue, without any rebuke. Locke.

Nathan's fable had so good an effect, as to bring the man after God's own heart to a right sense of his guilt. Spectator.

5. To attract; to draw along.

In distillation, the water ascends difficultly, and brings over with it some part of the oil of vitriol. Newton's Opticks.

6. To put into any particular state or circumstances; to make liable to any thing.

Having got the way of reasoning, which that study necessarily brings the mind to, they might be able to transfer it to other parts of knowledge, as they shall have occasion. Locke.

The question for bringing the king to justice was immediately put, and carried without any opposition, that I can find. Swift.

7. To lead by degrees.

A due consideration of the vanities of the world, will naturally bring us to the contempt of it; and the contempt of the world will as certainly bring us home to ourselves. L'Estrange.

The understanding should be brought to the difficult and knotty parts of knowledge by insensible degrees. Locke.

8. To recall; to summons.

But those, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

9. To induce; to prevail upon.

The nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, how, or whensoever, he is brought to reflect on them. Locke.

It seems so preposterous a thing to men, to make themselves unhappy in order to happiness, that they do not easily bring themselves to it. Locke.

Profitable employments would be no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men could but be brought to delight in them. Locke.

10. To bring about. [See ABOUT.] To bring to pass; to effect.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,
If all of you would join to help him out. Dryden.

This turn of mind threw off the oppositions of envy and competition; it enabled him to gain the most vain and impracticable into his designs, and to bring about several great events, for the advantage of the publick. Addison.

11. To bring forth. To give birth to; to produce.

The good queen,
For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter:
Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing. Shaksp.

More wonderful
Than that which, by creation, first brought forth
Light out of darkness! Paradise Lost.

Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works
It hath brought forth, to make thee memorable
Among illustrious women, faithful wives. Milton.

Bellona leads thee to thy lover's hand;
Another queen brings forth another brand,
To burn with foreign fires her native land! Dryden.

Idleness and luxury bring forth poverty and want; and this tempts men to injustice, and that causeth enmity and animosity. Tillotson.

The value of land is raised, when it is fitted to bring forth a greater quantity of any valuable product. Locke.

12. To bring forth. To bring to light.

The thing that is hid bringeth he forth to light.
Job, xxxviii. 11.

13. To bring in. To place in any condition.

He protests he loves you,
And needs no other suitor, but his liking,
To bring you in again. Shakspeare.

14. To bring in. To reduce.

Send over into that realm such a strong power of men, as should perforce bring in all that rebellious rout, and loose people. Spenser.

15. To bring in. To afford gain.

The sole measure of all his courtesies is, what return they will make him, and what revenue they will bring him in. South.

Trade brought us in plenty and riches. Locke.

16. To bring in. To introduce.

Entertain no long discourse with any; but, if you can, bring in something to season it with religion. Taylor.

There is but one God who made heaven and earth, and sea and winds; but the folly and madness of mankind brought in the images of gods. Stillingfleet.

The fruitfulness of Italy, and the like, are not brought in by force, but naturally rise out of the argument. Addison.

Since he could not have a seat among them himself, he would bring in one who had more merit. Tatler.

Quotations are best brought in to confirm some opinion controverted. Swift.

17. To bring off. To clear; to procure to be acquitted; to cause to escape.

I trusted to my head, that has betrayed me; and I found fault with my legs, that would otherwise have brought me off. L'Estrange.

Set a kite upon the bench, and it is forty to one he'll bring off a crow at the bar. L'Estrange.

The best way to avoid this imputation, and to bring off the credit of our understanding, is to be truly religious. Tillotson.

18. To bring on. To engage in action.

If there be any that would reign, and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on. Bacon.

19. To bring on. To produce as an occasional cause.

The fountains of the great deep being broke open, so as a general destruction and devastation was brought upon the earth, and all things in it. Burnet's Theory.

The great question, which in all ages has disturbed mankind, and brought on them those mischiefs. Locke.

20. To bring over. To convert; to draw to a new party.

This liberty should be made use of upon few occasions of small importance, and only with a view of bringing over his own side, another time, to something of greater and more publick moment. Swift.

The protestant clergy will find it, perhaps, no difficult matter to bring great numbers over to the church. Swift.

21. To bring out. To exhibit; to shew.

If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearers prove sheep, let me be unrolled. Shaksp.

Which he could bring out, where he had,
And what he bought them for, and paid. Hudibras.

These shake his soul, and, as they boldly press,
Bring out his crimes, and force him to confess. Dryd.

Another way made use of, to find the weight of the denarii, was by the weight of Greek coins; but those experiments bring out the denarius heavier. Arbuth.

22. To bring under. To subdue; to repress.

That sharp course which you have set down, for the bringing under of those rebels of Ulster, and preparing a way for their perpetual reformation. Spenser.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon.

23. To bring up. To educate; to instruct; to form.

The well bringing up of the people, serves as a most sure bond to hold them. Sidney.

He that takes upon him the charge of bringing up young men, especially young gentlemen, should have something more in him than Latin. Locke.

They frequently conversed with this lovely virgin, who had been brought up by her father in knowledge. Addison's Guardian.

24. To bring up. To introduce to general practice.

Several obliging deferences, condescensions, and submissions, with many outward forms and ceremonies, were first of all brought up among the politer part of mankind, who lived in courts and cities. Spectator.

25. To bring up. To cause to advance.

Bring up your army; but I think you'll find,
They 've not prepared for us. Shakspeare.

26. Bring retains, in all its senses, the idea of an agent, or cause, producing a real or metaphorical motion of something towards something; for it is oft said, that he brought his companion out. The meaning is, that he was brought to something that was likewise without.

BRI'NGER, brĭng'ûr.[409] n. s. [from bring.] The person that brings any thing.

Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office: and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd tolling a dead friend. Shakspeare.

Best you see safe the bringer
Out of the host: I must attend mine office. Shaksp.

BRI'NGER UP, brĭng'ûr-ûp. Instructor; educator.

Italy and Rome have been breeders and bringers up of the worthiest men. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

BRI'NISH, brī'nĭsh. adj. [from brine.] Having the taste of brine; salt.

Nero would be tainted with remorse
To hear and see her plaints, her brinish tears.
Shakspeare.

For now I stand, as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea,
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave;
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will, in his brinish bowels, swallow him. Shaksp.

BRI'NISHNESS, brī'nĭsh-nĕs. n. s. [from brinish.] Saltness; tendency to saltness.

BRINK, brĭnk. n. s. [brink, Danish.] The edge of any place; as of a precipice or a river.

Th' amazed flames stand gather'd in a heap,
And from the precipice's brink retire,
Afraid to venture on so large a leap. Dryden.

We stand therefore on the brinks and confines of those states at the day of doom. Atterbury.

So have I seen, from Severn's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together;
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And, swimming, never wet a feather. Swift.

BRI'NY, brī'nē. adj. [from brine.] Salt.

He, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide;
Or his, at least, in hollow wood,
Who tempted first the briny flood. Dryden.

Then, briny seas, and tasteful springs, farewel,
Where fountain nymphs, confus'd with Nereids, dwell. Addison.

A muriatick or briny taste seems to be produced by a mixture of an acid and alkaline salt; for spirit of salt, and salt of tartar, mixed, produce a salt like sea salt. Arbuthnot

BRI'ONY, brī'ò-nē. See BRYONY.

BRISK, brĭsk. adj. [brusque, French.]

1. Lively; vivacious; gay; sprightly: applied to men.

Pr'ythee, die, and set me free,
Or else be
Kind and brisk and gay, like me. Denham.

A creeping young fellow, that had committed matrimony with a brisk gamesome lass, was so altered in a few days, that he was liker a skeleton than a living man. L'Estrange.

Why should all honour then be ta'en
From lower parts to load the brain;
When other limbs we plainly see,
Each in his way, as brisk as he? Prior.

2. Powerful; spirituous.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine:
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine.
Denham.

Under ground, the rude Riphæan race
Mimick brisk cyder, with the brake's product wild,
Sloes pounded, hips, and servis' harshest juice.
Philips.

It must needs be some exteriour cause, and the brisk acting of some objects without me, whose efficacy I cannot resist. Locke.

3. Vivid; bright. This is not used.

Objects appeared much darker, because my instrument was overcharged; had it magnified thirty or twenty-five times, it had made the object appear more brisk and pleasant. Newton.

To BRISK UP, brĭsk'ûp. v. n. To come up briskly.

BRI'SKET, brĭs'kĭt.[99] n. s. [brichet, Fr.] The breast of an animal.

4. The edge of any high place.

The earl, nothing dismayed, came forwards that day unto a little village, called Stoke, and there encamped that night, upon the brow or hanging of a hill. Bacon.

On the brow of the hill, beyond that city, they were somewhat perplexed by espying the French embassador, with the king's coach, and others attending him. Wotton.

Them, with fire, and hostile arms,
Fearless assault; and to the brow of heav'n
Pursuing, drive them out from God and bliss. Milt.

To BROW, brôû. v. a. [from the noun.] To bound; to limit; to be at the edge of.

Tending my flocks hard by, i' th' hilly crofts
That brow this bottom glade. Milton.

To BRO'WBEAT, brôû'bête. v. a. [from brow and beat.] To depress with severe brows, and stern or lofty looks.

It is not for a magistrate to frown upon, and browbeat, those who are hearty and exact in their ministry; and, with a grave nod, to call a resolved zeal want of prudence. South.

What man will voluntarily expose himself to the imperious browbeatings and scorns of great men? L'Estrange.

Count Tariff endeavoured to browbeat the plaintiff, while he was speaking; but though he was not so impudent as the count, he was every whit as sturdy. Addison.

I will not be browbeaten by the supercilious looks of my adversaries. Arbuthnot and Pope.

BRO'WBOUND, brôû'bôûnd. adj. [from brow and bound.] Crowned; having the head encircled as with a diadem.

In that day's feats,
He prov'd the best man i' th' field; and for his meed,
Was brow-bound with the oak. Shakspeare.

BRO'WSICK, brôû'sîk. adj. [from brow and sick.] Dejected; hanging the head.

But yet a gracious influence from you
May alter nature in our browsick crew. Suckling

BROWN, brôûn. adj. [bpun, Sax.] The name of a colour, compounded of black and any other colour.

Brown, in high Dutch, is called braun; in the Netherlands, bruyun; in French, coleur brune; in Italian, bruno. Peacham.

I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a little browner. Shakspeare.

From whence high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'ercharging shades and pendent woods. Pope.

Long untravell'd heaths,
With desolation brown, he wanders waste. Thomson.

BRO'WNBILL, brôûn'bîl. n. s. [from brown and bill.] The ancient weapon of the English foot; why it is called brown, I have not discovered; but we now say brown musket from it.

And brownbills, levied in the city,
Made bills to pass the grand committee. Hudibras.

BRO'WNISH, brôûn'ish. adj. [from brown.] Somewhat brown.

A brownish grey iron-stone, lying in thin strata, is poor, but runs freely. Woodward.

BRO'WNNESS, brôûn'nês. n. s. [from brown.] A brown colour.

She would confess the contention in her own mind, between that lovely, indeed most lovely, brownness of Musidorus's face, and this colour of mine. Sidney.

BRO'WNSTUDY, brôûn-stûd'dê. n. s. [from brown and study.] Gloomy meditations; study in which we direct our thoughts to no certain point.

They live retired, and then they doze away their time in drowsiness and brownstudies; or, if brisk and active, they lay themselves out wholly in making common places. Norris.

To BROWSE, brôûze. v. a. [brouser, Fr.] To eat branches, or shrubs.

And being down, is trod in the dirt
Of cattle, and broused, and sorely hurt. Spenser.

Thy palate then did deign
The roughest berry on the rudest hedge:
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The barks of trees thou brousedst. Shakspeare.

To BROWSE, brôûze. v. n. To feed; it is used with the particle on.

They have scared away two of my best sheep; if any where I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, browsing on ivy. Shakspeare.

A goat, hard pressed, took sanctuary in a vineyard; so soon as he thought the danger over, he fell presently a browsing upon the leaves. L'Estrange.

Could eat the tender plant, and, by degrees,
Browse on the shrubs, and crop the budding trees. Blackmore.

The Greeks were the descendants of savages, ignorant of agriculture, and browsing on herbage, like cattle. Arbuthnot.

BROWSE, brôûze. n. s. [from the verb.] Branches, or shrubs, fit for the food of goats, or other animals.

The greedy lioness the wolf pursues,
The wolf the kid, the wanton kid the browse. Dryden.

On that cloud-piercing hill,
Plinlimmon, from afar, the traveller kens,
Astonish'd, how the goats their shrubby browse
Gnaw pendent. Philips.

To BRUISE, brôôze.[343] v. a. [briser, Fr.] To crush or mangle with the heavy blow of something not edged or pointed; to crush by any weight; to beat into gross powder; to beat together coarsely.

Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
Bruis'd underneath the yoke of tyranny. Shakspeare.

And fix far deeper in his head their stings,
Than temporal death shall bruise the victor's heel,
Or theirs whom he redeems. Milton.

As in old chaos heav'n with earth confus'd,
And stars with rocks together crush'd and bruis'd.
Waller

They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,
Till they turn livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryden.

BRUISE, brôôze. n. s. [from the verb.] A hurt with something blunt and heavy.

One arm'd with metal, th' other with wood,
This fit for bruise, and that for blood. Hudibras.

I since have labour'd
To bind the bruises of a civil war,
And stop the issues of their wasting blood. Dryden.

BRU'ISEWORT, brôôze'wûrt. n. s. An herb; the same with COMFREY.

BRUIT, brôôt.[343] n. s. [bruit, Fr.] Rumour; noise; report.

A bruit ran from one to the other that the king was slain. Sidney.

Upon some bruits he apprehended a fear, which moved him to send to Sir William Herbert to remain his friend. Hayward.

I am not
One that rejoices in the common wreck,
As common bruit doth put it. Shakspeare.

To BRUIT, brôôt.[343] v. a. [from the noun.] To report; to noise abroad; to rumour. Neither the verb nor the noun are now much in use.

His death,
Being bruited once, took fire and heat away
From the best temper'd courage in his troops. Shak.

It was bruited, that I meant nothing less than to go to Guiana. Raleigh.

BRU'MAL, brôô'mâl. adj. [brumalis, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

About the brumal solstice, it hath been observed, even unto a proverb, that the sea is calm, and the winds do cease, till the young ones are excluded, and forsake their nests. Brown.

BRUN, BRAN, BORN, BOURN, BURN, brûn, brân, bôrn, bôrne, bûrn, are all derived from the Saxon, bopn, boupn, bpunna, bupna; all signifying a river or brook. Gibson.

BRUNE'TT, brô-nêt'. n. s. [brunette, Fr.] A woman with a brown complexion.

Your fair women therefore thought of this fashion, to insult the olives and the brunettes. Addison.

BRU'NION, brôô'nê-yône. n. s. [brugnon, Fr.] A sort of fruit between a plum and a peach. Trevoux.

BRUNT, brûnt. n. s. [brunst, Dutch.]

1. Shock; violence.

Erona chose rather to bide the brunt of war than venture him. Sidney.

God, who caus'd a fountain, at thy pray'r,
From the dry ground to spring, thy thirst t' allay
After the brunt of battle. Milton.

Faithful ministers are to stand and endure the brunt: a common soldier may fly, when it is the duty of him that holds the standard to die upon the place. South.

2. Blow; stroke.

A wicked ambush, which lay hidden long,
In the close covert of her guileful eyen,
Thence breaking forth, did thick about me throng,
Too feeble I t' abide the brunt so strong. Spenser.

The friendly rug preserv'd the ground,
And headlong knight, from bruise or wound,
Like featherbed betwixt a wall,
And heavy brunt of cannon-ball. Hudibras.

BRUSH, brûsh. n. s. [brosse, Fr. from bruscus, Lat.]

1. An instrument to clean any thing, by rubbing off the dirt or soil. It is generally made of bristles set in wood.

2. It is used for the larger and stronger pencils used by painters.

Whence comes all this rage of wit? this arming all the pencils and brushes of the town against me? Stilling fleet.

With a small brush you must smear the glue well upon the joint of each piece. Moxon.

3. A rude assault; a shock; rough treatment; which, by the same metaphor, we call a scouring.

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,
And tempt not yet the brushes of the war. Shaksp.
It could not be possible, that upon so little a brush as Waller had sustained, he could not be able to follow and disturb the king. Clarendon.
Else, when we put it to the push,
They had not given us such a brush. Hudibras.

To BRUSH, brŭsh. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sweep or rub with a brush.
If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: he brushes his hat o' morning; what should that bode? Shakspeare.

2. To strike with quickness, as in brushing.
The wrathful beast about him turned light,
And him so rudely passing by, did brush
With his long tail, that horse and man to ground did rush. Spenser's Fairy Queen.
Has Somnus brush'd thy eyelids with his rod? Dryden.
His son Cupavo brush'd the briny flood,
Upon his stern a brawny centaur stood. Dryden.
High o'er the billows flew the massy load,
And near the ship came thund'ring on the flood,
It almost brush'd the helm. Pope.

3. To paint with a brush.
You have commissioned me to paint your shop, and I have done my best to brush you up like your neighbours. Pope.

4. To carry away, by an act like that of brushing; to sweep.
And from the boughs brush off the evil dew,
And heal the harms of thwarting thunder blew. Milt.
The receptacle of waters, into which the mouths of all rivers must empty themselves, ought to have so spacious a surface, that as much water may be continually brushed off by the winds, and exhaled by the sun, as, besides what falls again, is brought into it by all the rivers. Bentley.

5. To move as the brush.
A thousand nights have brush'd their balmy wings
Over these eyes. Dryden.

To BRUSH, brŭsh. v. n.

1. To move with haste: a ludicrous word, applied to men.
Nor wept his fate, nor cast a pitying eye,
Nor took him down, but brush'd regardless by. Dryd.
The French had gather'd all their force,
And William met them in their way;
Yet off they brush'd, both foot and horse. Prior.

2. To fly over; to skim lightly.
Nor love is always of a vicious kind;
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind,
Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And, brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool. Dryden.

BRU'SHER, brŭsh'ŭr. n. s. [from brush.] He that uses a brush.
Sir Henry Wotton used to say, that criticks were like brushers of noblemen's cloaths. Bacon.

BRU'SHWOOD, brŭsh'wŏŏd. n. s. [from brush and wood. I know not whether it may not be corrupted from browse-wood.] Rough, low, close, shrubby thickets; small wood fit for fire.
It smokes, and then with trembling breath she blows,
Till in a cheerful blaze the flames arose.
With brushwood, and with chips, she strengthens these,
And adds at last the boughs of rotten trees. Dryden.

BRU'SHY, brŭsh'ė. adj. [from brush.] Rough or shaggy, like a brush.
I suspected, that it might have proceeded from some small unheeded drop of blood, wiped off by the brushy substance of the nerve, from the knife wherewith it was cut. Boyle.

To BRU'STLE, brŭs'sl.[472] v. n. [bpaſtlian, Sax.] To crackle; to make a small noise. Skinner.

BRU'TAL, brôô'tâl.[343] adj. [brutal, French; from brute.]

1. That which belongs to a brute; that which we have in common with brutes.
There is no opposing brutal force to the stratagems of human reason. L'Estrange.

2. Savage; cruel: inhuman.
The brutal bus'ness of the war,
Is manag'd by thy dreadful servants care. Dryden.

BRUTA'LITY, brôô-tâl'ė-tė. n. s. [brutalité, Fr.] Savageness; churlishness; inhumanity.
Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion, of brutality. Locke.

To BRU'TALIZE, brôô'tâ-lize. v. n. [brutaliser, Fr.] To grow brutal or savage.
Upon being carried to the Cape of Good Hope, he mixed, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his foreign acquaintance. Addison.

To BRU'TALIZE, brôô'tâ-lize. v. a. To make brutal or savage.

BRU'TALLY, brôô'tâl-lė. adv. [from brutal.] Churlishly; inhumanly; cruelly.
Mrs. Bull aimed a knife at John, though John threw a bottle at her head, very brutally indeed Arbuthnot.

BRUTE, brôôt.[339] adj. [brutus, Latin.]

1. Senseless; unconscious.
Nor yet are we so low and base as their atheism would depress us; not walking statues of clay, not the sons of brute earth, whose final inheritance is death and corruption. Bentley.

2. Savage; irrational; ferine.
Even brute animals make use of this artificial way, of making divers motions to have several significations, to call, warn, chide, cherish, threaten. Holder.
In the promulgation of the Mosaick law, if so much as a brute beast touched the mountain, it was to be struck through with a dart. South.

3. Bestial; in common with beasts.
Then to subdue, and quell, through all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick pow'r. Milton.

4. Rough; ferocious; uncivilized.
The brute philosopher, who ne'er has prov'd
The joy of loving, or of being lov'd. Pope.

BRUTE, brôôt. n. s. [from the adjective.] An irrational creature; a creature without reason; a savage.
What may this mean? Language of man pronounc'd
By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd! Milton.
To those three present impulses, of sense, memory, and instinct, most, if not all, the sagacities of brutes may be reduced. Hale.
Brutes may be considered as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatick, or amphibious. I call those aerial which have wings, wherewith they can support themselves in the air; terrestrial are those, whose only place of rest is upon the earth; aquatick are those, whose constant abode is upon the water; and amphibious are those, which live freely in the air, upon the earth, and yet are observed to live long upon the water. Locke.
Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate,
All but the page prescrib'd, this present state;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.

To BRUTE, brôôt.[343] v. a. [written ill for bruit.] To report.
This, once bruted through the army, filled them all with heaviness. Knolles.

BRU'TENESS, brôôt'nês. n. s. [from brute.] Brutality: a word not now used.
Thou dotard vile,
That with thy bruteness shend'st thy comely age. Spenser.

To BRU'TIFY, brôôt'tė-fi. v. n. [from brute.] To make a man a brute.
O thou fallacious woman! am I then brutified? Ay; I feel it here; I sprout, I bud, I am ripe horn mad. Congreve.

BRU'TISH, brôô'tish. adj. [from brute.]

1. Bestial; resembling a beast.
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abus'd
Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek
Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton.

2. Having the qualities of a brute; rough; savage; ferocious.
Brutes, and brutish men, are commonly more able to bear pain than others. Grew.

3. Gross; carnal.
For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself. Shakspeare.
After he has slept himself into some use of himself, by much ado he staggers to his table again, and there acts over the same brutish scene. South.

4. Ignorant; untaught; uncivilized.
They were not so brutish, that they could be ignorant to call upon the name of God. Hooker.

BRU'TISHLY, brôô'tish-lė. adv. [from brutish.] In the manner of a brute; savagely; irrationally; grossly.
I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.
For a man to found a confident practice upon a disputable principle, is brutishly to outrun his reason. South.

BRU'TISHNESS, brôô'tish-nês. n. s. [from brutish.] Brutality; savageness
All other courage, besides that, is not true valour, but brutishness. Spratt.

BRY'ONY, bri'ô-nė. n. s. [bryonia, Lat.] A plant.

BUB, bŭb. n. s. [a cant word.] Strong malt liquor.
Or if it be his fate to meet
With folks who have more wealth than wit,
He loves cheap port, and double bub,
And settles in the humdrum club. Prior.

BU'BBLE, bŭb'bl.[405] n. s. [bobbel, Dutch.]

1. A small bladder of water; a film of water filled with wind.
Bubbles are in the form of a hemisphere; air within, and a little skin of water without: and it seemeth somewhat strange, that the air should rise so swiftly, while it is in the water, and when it cometh to the top, should be stayed by so weak a cover as that of the bubble is, Bacon.
The colours of bubbles, with which children play, are various, and change their situation variously, without any respect to confine or shadow. Newton.

2. Any thing which wants solidity and firmness; any thing that is more specious than real.
The earl of Lincoln was induced to participate, not lightly upon the strength of the proceedings there, which was but a bubble, but upon letters from the lady Margaret. Bacon.
Then a soldier,
Seeking the bubble reputation,
Even in the cannon's mouth. Shakspeare.
War, he sung, is toil and trouble,
Honour but an empty bubble,
Fighting still, and still destroying. Dryden.

3. A cheat; a false show.
The nation then too late will find,
Directors promises but wind,
South-sea at best a mighty bubble. Swift.

4. The person cheated.
Cease, dearest mother, cease to chide;
Gany 's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;
Yet why this great excess of trouble? Prior.
He has been my bubble these twenty years, and to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes. Arbuthnot

To Bu'bble, bůb'bl. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise in bubbles.

Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall. Shakspeare.

Adder's fork, and blindworm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing:
For a charm of pow'rful trouble,
Like a hellbroth boil and bubble. Shakspeare.

Still bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears. Dryden.

The same spring suffers at some times a very manifest remission of its heat; at others, as manifest an increase of it; yea, sometimes to that excess, as to make it boil and bubble with extreme heat. Woodward.

2. To run with a gentle noise.

For thee the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for thy return. Dryden.

Not bubbling fountains to the thirsty swain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sunshine to the bee,
Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.

To Bu'bble, bůb'bl. v. a. To cheat: a cant word.

He tells me, with great passion, that she has bubbled him out of his youth; and has drilled him on to five and fifty. Addison.

Charles Mather could not bubble a young beau better with a toy. Arbuthnot.

Bu'bbler, bůb'blůr.[405] n. s. [from bubble.] A cheat.

What words can suffice to express, how infinitely I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubblers! Digby to Pope.

Bu'bby, bůb'bė. n. s. A woman's breast.

Foh! say they, to see a handsome, brisk, genteel young fellow, so much governed by a doating old woman; why don't you go and suck the bubby? Arbuthnot.

Bu'bo, bů'bō. n. s. [Lat. from βουβὼν the groin.] That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called buboes. Quincy.

I suppurated it after the manner of a bubo, opened it, and endeavoured detersion. Wiseman.

Bubonoce'le, bů'bō-nō-sēle'. n. s. [Lat. from βουβὼν the groin, and κηλη a rupture.] A particular kind of rupture, when the intestines break down into the groin. Quincy.

When the intestine, or omentum, falls through the rings of the abdominal muscles into the groin, it is called hernia inguinalis, or if into the scrotum, scrotalis: these two, though the first only is properly so called, are known by the name of bubonocele. Sharp.

Bu'bukle, bů'bůk-kl.[405] n. s. A red pimple.

His face is all bubukles, and whelks, and knobs, and flames of fire. Shaksp.

Bucani'ers, bůk-å-nēērz'. n. s. A cant word for the privateers, or pirates of America.

Buccella'tion, bůk-sěl-lā'shůn. n. s. [buccella, a mouthful, Lat.] In some chymical authors, signifies dividing into large pieces. Harris.

BUCK, bůk. n. s. [bauche, Germ. suds, or lye.]

1. The liquor in which clothes are washed.

Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck; I warrant you, buck, and of the season too it shall appear. Shakspeare.

2. The clothes washed in the liquor.

Of late not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home. Shaksp.

BUCK, bůk. n. s. [bwch, Welsh; bock, Dutch; bouc, Fr.] The male of the fallow deer; the male of rabbits, and other animals.

Bucks, goats, and the like, are said to be tripping or saliant, that is, going or leaping. Peacham.

To Buck, bůk. v. a. [from the noun.] To wash clothes.

Here is a basket; he may creep in here, and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking. Shakspeare.

To Buck, bůk. v. n. [from the noun.] To copulate as bucks and does.

The chief time of setting traps, is in their bucking time. Mortimer.

Bu'ckbasket, bůk'bâs-kĕt. n. s. The basket in which clothes are carried to the wash.

They conveyed me into a buckbasket; rammed me in with foul shirts, foul stockings, and greasy napkins. Shakspeare.

Bu'ckbean, bůk'bēne. n. s. [bocksboonen, Dutch.] A plant; a sort of trefoil.

The bitter, nauseous plants, as centaury, buckbane, gentian, of which tea may be made, or wines by infusion. Floyer.

Bu'cket, bůk'kĭt.[99] n. s. [baquet, Fr.]

1. The vessel in which water is drawn out of a well.

Now is this golden crown like a deep well
That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down unseen and full of water. Shaksp.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Bentley.

2. The vessel in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.

Now streets grow throng'd, and, busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.

The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,
To a less noble substance chang'd,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

Bu'ckle, bůk'kl.[405] n. s. [bwccl, Welsh, and the same in the Armorick; boucle, French.]

1. A link of metal, with a tongue or catch, made to fasten one thing to another.

Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold. Shakspeare.

The chlamys was a sort of short cloak tied with a buckle, commonly to the right shoulder. Arbuth.

Three seal-rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.

2. The state of the hair crisped and curled, by being kept long in the same state.

The greatest beau was dressed in a flaxen periwig; the wearer of it goes in his own hair at home, and lets his wig lie in buckle for a whole half year. Spectator.

That live-long wig, which Gorgon's self might own,
Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone. Pope.

To Bu'ckle, bůk'kl. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a buckle.

Like saphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Shakspeare.

France, whose armour conscience buckled on, Whom zeal and charity brought to the field. Shak

Thus ever, when I buckle on my helmet,
Thy fears afflict thee. Philips.

When you carry your master's riding coat, wrap your own in it, and buckle them up close with a strap. Swift.

2. To prepare to do any thing: the metaphor is taken from buckling on the armour.

The Saracen, this hearing, rose amain,
And catching up in haste his three-square shield,
And shining helmet, soon him buckled to the field. Spenser.

3. To join in battle.

The lord Gray, captain of the men at arms, was forbidden to charge, until the foot of the avantguard were buckled with them in front. Hayward.

4. To confine.

How brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage!
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age. Shakspeare.

To Bu'ckle, bůk'kl. v. n. [bucken, Germ.]

1. To bend; to bow.

The wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms. Shakspeare.

2. To buckle to. To apply to; to attend. See the active, 2d sense.

Now a covetous old crafty knave,
At dead of night, shall raise his son, and cry,
Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie!
Go, buckle to the law. Dryden.

This is to be done in children, by trying them, when they are by laziness unbent, or by avocation bent another way, and endeavouring to make them buckle to the thing proposed. Locke.

3. To buckle with. To engage with; to encounter; to join in a close fight, like men locked or buckled together.

For single combat thou shalt buckle with me. Shakspeare.

Yet thou, they say, for marriage dost provide;
Is this an age to buckle with a bride? Dryden.

Bu'ckler, bůk'lůr. n. s. [bwccled, Welsh; bouclier, Fr.] A shield; a defensive weapon buckled on the arm.

He took my arms, and while I forc'd my way
Through troops of foes, which did our passage stay;
My buckler o'er my aged father cast,
Still fighting, still defending, as I past. Dryden.

This medal compliments the emperor as the Romans did dictator Fabius, when they called him the buckler of Rome. Addison.

To Bu'ckler, bůk'lůr. v. a. [from the noun.] To support; to defend.

Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee, Kate;
I'll buckler thee against a million. Shakspeare.

Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
Now buckler falshood with a pedigree? Shakspeare.

BUD, bůd'. n. s. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.

Be as thou was wont to be,
See as thou was wont to see;
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath such force and blessed power. Shaksp.

Writer's say, as the most forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud,
Losing his verdure even in the prime. Shakspeare.

When you the flow'rs for Chloe twine,
Why do you to her garland join
The meanest bud that falls from mine? Prior.

Insects wound the tender buds, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liquor, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice. Bentley.

To BUD, bůd. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To put forth young shoots, or gems.

Bud forth as a rose growing by the brook of the field. Eccl.

2. To rise as a gem from the stalk.

There the fruit, that was to be gathered from such a conflux, quickly budded out. Clarendon.

Heav'n gave him all at once, then snatch'd away,
Ere mortals all his beauties could survey:
Just like that flower that buds and withers in a day. Dryden.

Tho' lab'ring yokes on their own necks they fear'd,
And felt for budding horns on their smooth foreheads rear'd. Dryden's Silenus.

3. To be in the bloom, or growing.

Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and sweet,
Whither away, or where is thy abode? Shaksp.

To BUD, bůd. v. a. To inoculate; to graff by inserting a bud into the rind of another tree.

Of apricocks, the largest is much improved by budding upon a peach stock. Temple.

To BUDGE, bůdje. v. n. [bouger, Fr.] To stir; to move off the place; a low word.

All your prisoners are
In the lime grove, which weatherfends your cell,
They cannot budge till your release. Shakspeare.

The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they. Shakspeare.

I thought th' hadst scorn'd to budge
For fear. Hudibras.

BUDGE, bůdje. adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Surly; stiff; formal.

O foolishness of men! that lend their ears
To those budge doctors of the stoick fur. Milton.

BUDGE, bůdje. n. s. The dressed skin or fur of lambs. Dict.

BU'DGER, bůd'jůr. n. s. [from the verb.] One that moves or stirs from his place.

Let the first budger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after. Shaksp.

BU'DGET, bůd'jět. n. s. [bogette, Fr.]

1. A bag, such as may be easily carried.

If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the sowskin budget;
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it. Shakspeare.

Sir Robert Clifford, in whose bosom, or budget, most of Perkin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Bacon.

His budget with corruptions cramm'd,
The contributions of the damn'd. Swift.

2. It is used for a store, or stock.

It was nature, in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Estrange.

BUFF, bůf. n. s. [from buffalo.]

1. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.

A ropy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.

2. The skins of elks and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.

3. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.

A fiend, a fairy, pitiless and rough,
A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shaksp.

To BUFF, bůf. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike; it is a word not in use.

There was a shock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From aught but a block. Ben Jonson.

BU'FFALO, bůf'fâ-lò. n. s. [Ital.] A kind of wild ox.

Become the unworthy browse
Of buffaloes, salt goats, and hungry cows. Dryden.

BU'FFET, bůf'fît.[99] n. s. [buffeto, Ital.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shakspeare.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
Has ta'en with equal thanks. Shakspeare.

Go, baffled coward, lest I run upon thee,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low. Milton.

Round his hollow temples, and his ears,
His buckler beats; the son of Neptune, stunn'd
With these repeated buffets, quits the ground. Dryden.

BUFFE'T, bůf-fêt'. n. s. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to show, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face. Pope.

To BU'FFET, bůf'fît.[99] v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, Peer out, peer out! that any madness, I ever yet beheld, seemed but tameness. Shakspeare.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France. Shaksp.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside. Shaksp.

Instantly I plung'd into the sea,
And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine. Otway.

To BU'FFET, bůf'fît. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

If I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher. Shakspeare's Henry V.

To BU'FFLE, bůf'fl. v. n. [from the noun.] To puzzle; to be at a loss.

This was the utter ruin of that poor, angry, buffling, well-meaning mortal, Pistorides, who lies equally under the contempt of both parties. Swift.

BU'FFLEHEADED, bůf'fl-hêd-êd. adj. [from buffle and head.] A man with a large head, like a buffalo; dull; stupid; foolish.

BUFFO'ON, bůf-fôôn'. n. s. [buffon, Fr.]

1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antick postures; a jack-pudding.

No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvassed on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons. Watts.

2. A man that practises indecent raillery.

It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others. L'Estrange.

The bold buffoon, whene'er they tread the green,
Their motion mimicks, but with jest obscene. Garth.

BUFFO'ONERY, bůf-fôôn'ůr-rè. n. s. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.

Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion, of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffoonery. Locke.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth. Dryden places the accent improperly, on the first syllable.

Where public ministers encourage buffoonery, it is no wonder if buffoons set up for public ministers. L'Estrange.

And whilst it lasts, let buffoonery succeed,
To make us laugh, for never was more need. Dryden.

BUG, bůg. n. s. A stinking insect bred in old household stuff. In the following passage, wings are erroneously ascribed to it.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which stinks and stings. Pope.

BUG, bůg. } n. s. [It is derived
BU'GBEAR, bůg'bâre. } by some from big, by others from pug; bug; in Welsh, has the same meaning.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen: generally now used for a false terror to frighten babes.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear,
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Queen.

Sir, spare your threats;
The bug which you would fright me with, I seek. Shakspeare.

Hast not slept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him. Shaksp.

We have a horrour for uncouth monsters; but, upon experience, all these bugs grow familiar and easy to us. L'Estrange.

Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again. Locke.

To the world, no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate. Pope.

BU'GGINESS, bůg'gè-nês. n. s. [from buggy.] The state of being infected with bugs.

BU'GGY, bůg'gè.[283] adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

BU'GLEHORN, bů'gl-hôrn'. } buzen, Sax. to bend, Skinner; from bucula, Lat. a heifer, Junius; from bugle, the bonasus, Lye.] A hunting horn.

Then took that squire an horny bugle small,
Which hung adown his side in twisted gold,
And tassels gay. Fairy Queen.

I will have a recheate winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick. Shaksp.

He gave his bugle horn a blast,
That through the woodland echo'd far and wide. Tickell.

Bu'gle, bû'gl. n. s. A shining bead of black glass.

Bugle bracelets, necklace amber,
Perfum'd for a lady's chamber. Shakspeare.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shaks.

Bu'gle, bû'gl. n. s. [from bugula, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

Bu'gle, bû'gl. n. s. A sort of wild ox. Phillips's World of Words.

To BUILD, bild.[341] v. a. preter. I built, I have built. [bilden, Dutch.]

1. To raise from the ground; to make a fabrick, or an edifice.

Thou shalt not build an house unto my name. Chronicles.

When usurers tell their gold in the field,
And whores and bawds do churches build. Shaksp.

2. To raise in any laboured form.

When the head-dress was built up in a couple of cones and spires, which stood so excessively high on the side of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head-dress, appeared like a Colossus upon putting it on. Spectator.

3. To raise any thing on a support or foundation.

Love built on beauty, soon as beauty, dies;
Choose this face, chang'd by no deformities. Donne.

I would endeavour to destroy those curious, but groundless structures, that men have built up of opinions alone. Boyle.

To Build, bild. v. n.

1. To play the architect.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the column, or the arch to bend. Pope.

2. To depend on; to rest on.

By a man's authority, we here understand the force which his word hath for the assurance of another's mind, that buildeth upon it. Hooker.

Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and putting tricks upon them, than upon soundness of their own proceedings. Bacon.

Even those who had not tasted of your favours, yet built so much on the fame of your beneficence, that they bemoaned the loss of their expectations. Dryden.

This is certainly a much surer way, than to build on the interpretations of an author, who does not consider how the ancients used to think. Addison.

Bui'lder, bîld'ûr.[98] n. s. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.

But fore-accounting oft makes builders miss;
They found, they felt, they had no lease of bliss. Sidney.

When they, which had seen the beauty of the first temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the second, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavoured, with comforts, to wipe away. Hooker.

Mark'd out for such an use, as if 'twere meant
T' invite the builder, and his choice prevent. Denham.

Her wings with lengthen'd honour let her spread,
And, by her greatness, shew her builder's fame. Prior.

Bui'lding, bîld'îng.[410] n. s. [from build.] A fabrick; an edifice.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakspeare.

View not this spire by measure giv'n
To buildings rais'd by common hands:
That fabrick rises high as heav'n,
Whose basis on devotion stands. Prior.

Among the great variety of ancient coins which I saw at Rome, I could not but take particular notice of such as relate to any of the buildings or statues that are still extant. Addison.

Built, bilt. n. s. [from build.]

1. The form; the structure.

As is the built, so different is the fight;
Their mountain shot is on our sails design'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

2. Species of building.

There is hardly any country, which has so little shipping as Ireland; the reason must be, the scarcity of timber proper for this built. Temple.

BULB, bûlb. n. s. [from bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.

Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs, if you will remove them. Evelyn's Kalendar.

If we consider the bulb, or ball of the eye, the exterior membrane, or coat thereof, is made thick, tough, or strong, that it is a very hard matter to make a rupture in it. Ray.

Bulba'ceous, bûl-bâ'shŭs. adj. [bulbaceus, Lat.] The same with bulbous. Dict.

Bul'bous, bûl'bŭs.[314] adj. [from bulb.] Containing bulbs; consisting of bulbs; having round or roundish knobs.

There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots, and hirsute roots. And I take it, in the bulbous, the sap hasteneth most to the air and sun. Bacon.

Set up your traps for vermin, especially amongst your bulbous roots. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Their leaves, after they are swelled out, like a bulbous root, to make the bottle, bend inward, or come again close to the stalk. Ray on the Creation.

To Bulge, bûlje. v. a. [It was originally written bilge: bilge was the lower part of the ship, where it swelled out; from bilg, Sax. a bladder.]

1. To take in water; to founder.

Thrice round the ship was tost,
Then bulg'd at once, and in the deep was lost. Dryd.

2. To jut out.

The side, or part of the side of a wall, or any timber that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter, or hang over the foundation. Moxon.

Bul'imy, bûl'ê-mè. n. s. [βϫλιμία, from βϫς an ox, and λιμὸς hunger.] An enormous appetite, attended with fainting, and coldness of the extremities. Dict.

BULK, bûlk. n. s. [bulcke, Dutch, the breast, or largest part of a man.]

1. Magnitude of material substance; mass.

Against these forces there were prepared near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion, and more serviceable. Bacon's War with Spain.

The Spaniards and Portuguese have ships of great bulk; but fitter for the merchant than the man of war, for burden than for battle. Raleigh.

Though an animal arrives at its full growth at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the last period of life. Arbuthnot.

2. Size; quantity.

Things, or objects, cannot enter into the mind as they subsist in themselves, and by their own natural bulk pass into the apprehension; but they are taken in by their ideas. South.

3. The gross; the majority; the main mass.

Those very points, in which these wise men disagreed from the bulk of the people, are points in which they agreed with the received doctrines of our nature. Addison's Freeholder.

Change in property, through the bulk of a nation, makes slow marches, and its due power always attends it. Swift.

The bulk of the debt must be lessened gradually. Swift.

4. Main fabrick.

He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
That it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And end his being. Shakspeare.

5. The main part of a ship's cargo; as to break bulk, is to open the cargo.

Bulk, bûlk. n. s. [from bielcke, Danish, a beam.] A part of a building jutting out.

Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come:
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home. Shak.

The keeper coming up, found Jack with no life in him; he took down the body, and laid it on a bulk, and brought out the rope to the company. Arbuthnot.

Bu'lkhead, bûlk-hêd'. n. s. A partition made across a ship, with boards, whereby one part is divided from another. Harris.

Bu'lkiness, bûl'kè-nês. n. s. [from bulky.] Greatness of stature, or size.

Wheat, or any other grain, cannot serve instead of money, because of its bulkiness, and change of its quantity. Locke.

Bu'lky, bûl'kè adj. [from bulk.] Of great size or stature.

Latreus, the bulkiest of the double race,
Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Halesus grace. Dryden.

Huge Telephus, a formidable page,
Cries vengeance; and Orestes' bulky rage,
Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers. Dryden.

The manner of sea engagements, which was to bore and sink the enemy's ships with the rostra, gave bulky and high ships a great advantage. Arbuthnot.

BULL, bûl.[173] n. s. [bulle, Dutch.]

1. The male of black cattle; the male to a cow.

A gentlewoman, Sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.—Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shakspeare.

Bulls are more crisp upon the forehead than cows. Bacon.

Best age to go to bull, or calve, we hold,
Begins at four, and ends at ten years old. May.

2. In the scriptural sense, an enemy powerful, fierce, and violent.

Many bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round. Psalms.

3. One of the twelve signs of the zodiack.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson.

4. A letter published by the pope.

A bull is letters called apostolick by the canonists, strengthened with a leaden seal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or bishop of Rome. Ayliffe.

There was another sort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bullæ; round, or of the figure of a heart hung about their necks like diamond crosses. Those bullæ came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperors and popes, from whence they had the name of bulls. Arbuthnot.

It was not till after a fresh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was in the point of abuses. Atterbury.

5. A blunder; a contradiction.

I confess it is what the English call a bull, in the expression, though the sense be manifest enough. Pope's Letters.

Bull, bûl. In composition, generally notes the large size of any thing, as bull-head, bulrush, bull-trout; and is therefore only an augmentative syllable, without much reference to its original signification.

The u is mute in both.] To keep afloat; to bear up.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant. King Charles.

The water which rises out of the abyss, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

To BUOY, bůôė. v. n. To float; to rise by specifick lightness.

Rising merit will buoy up at last. Pope.

BUO'YANCY, bůôė'ăn-sė. n. s. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BUO'YANT, bůôė'ânt. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light; that which will not sink. Dryden uses the word, perhaps improperly, for something that has density enough to hinder a floating body from sinking.

I swom with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant. Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,
So full of buoyant spirit, now no more
Inspire the course. Thomson's Autumn.

The next thing which she waking looks upon,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,
She shall pursue it with the soul of love. Shakspeare.
Thus busy pow'r is working day and night;
For when the outward senses rest do take,
A thousand dreams, fantastical and light,
With flutt'ring wings, do keep her still awake.
Davies.

The coming spring would first appear,
And all this place with roses strow,
If busy feet would let them grow. Waller.

All written since that time, seem to have little more than events we are glad to know, or the controversy of opinions, wherein the busy world has been so much employed. Temple.

Religious motives and instincts are so busy in the heart of every reasonable creature, that no man would hope to govern a society, without regard to those principles. Addison.

3. Troublesome; vexatiously importunate or intensive.

The christians, sometimes valiantly receiving the enemy, and sometimes charging them again, repulsed the proud enemy, still busy with them. Knolles.

To Bu'sy, bîz'zė. v. a. [from the noun.] To employ; to engage: to make or keep busy.

He in great passion all this while did dwell,
More busying his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell.
Fairy Queen.

The pleasure which I took at my friend's pleasure herein, idly busied me thus to express the same. Carew's Survey.

Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels. Shaksp.

Bu'sybody, bîz'zė-bôd-dė. n. s [from busy and body.] A vain, meddling, fantastical person.

Going from house to house, tatlers and busybodies are the canker and rust of idleness, as idleness is the rust of time. Taylor.

Busybodies and intermeddlers are a dangerous sort of people to have to do withal. L'Estrange.

She is well acquainted with all the favourite servants, busybodies, dependants, and poor relations, of all persons of condition in the whole town. Spectator.

But, bût. conjunct. [bute, butan, Sax.]

1. Except.

An emission of immateriate virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it is so prodigious: but that it is so constantly avouched by many. Bacon.

Who can it be, ye gods! but perjur'd Lycon?

Who can inspire such storms of rage, but Lycon?
Where has my sword left one so black, but Lycon?
Smith.

Your poem hath been printed, and we have no objection but the obscurity of several passages, by our ignorance in facts and persons. Swift.

2. Except that; unless; had it not been that: in this sense we now write but that. See sense 11.

And but infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters measur'd. Shakspeare.

3. Yet; nevertheless. It sometimes only enforces yet.

Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without shall hear his voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and exile, like the voice of puppets: and yet the articulate sounds of the words will not be confounded. Bacon.

Our wants are many, and grievous to be born, but quite of another kind. Swift.

4. The particle which introduces the minor of a syllogism; now.

If there be a liberty and possibility for a man to kill himself to-day, then it is not absolutely necessary that he shall live till to-morrow; but there is such a liberty, therefore no such necessity.
Bramhall against Hobbes.

God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world; therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made. Watts's Logick.

5. Only; nothing more than.

If my offence be of mortal kind,
That not my service past, or present sorrows,
Can ransom me into his love again;
But to know so, must be my benefit. Shaksp.

What nymph soe'er his voice but hears,
Will be my rival, though she have but ears.
Ben Jonson.

No, Aurengzebe, you merit all my heart,
And I'm too noble but to give a part. Dryden.

Did but men consider the true notion of God, he would appear to be full of goodness. Tillotson.

If we do but put virtue and vice in equal circumstances, the advantages of ease and pleasure will be found to be on the side of religion. Tillotson.

The mischiefs or harms that come by play, inadvertency, or ignorance, are not at all, or but very gently, to be taken notice of. Locke on Education.

If a reader examines Horace's Art of Poetry, he will find but very few precepts in it, which he may not meet with in Aristotle. Addison.

Prepar'd I stand: he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope.

6. Than.

The full moon was no sooner up, and shining in all its brightness, but he opened the gate of Paradise. Guardian.

7. But that; without this consequence that.

Frosts that constrain the ground
Do seldom their usurping power withdraw,
But raging floods pursue their hasty hand. Dryd.

8. Otherwise than that.

It cannot be but nature hath some director, of infinite power, to guide her in all her ways. Hooker.

Who shall believe,
But you misuse the reverence of your place? Shaks.

9. Not more than; even.

A genius so elevated and unconfined as Mr. Cowley's, was but necessary to make Pindar speak English. Dryden.

Beroe but now I left; whom, pin'd with pain,
Her age and anguish from these rites detain.
Dryden.

It is evident, in the instance I gave but now, the consciousness went along. Locke.

10. By any other means than.

Out of that will I cause those of Cyprus to mutiny: whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by transplanting of Cassio. Shaksp.

11. If it were not for this; that; if it were not that. Obsolete.

Believe me, I'd rather have lost my purse
Full of cruzades. And but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill-thinking. Shakspeare.

I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee. Shaksp.

12. However; howbeit; a word of indeterminate connexion.

I do not doubt but I have been to blame;
But, to pursue the end for which I came,
Unite your subjects first, then let us go
And pour their common rage upon the foe. Dryd.

13. It is used after no doubt, no question, and such words, and signifies the same with that. It sometimes is joined with that.

They made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon.

I fancied to myself a kind of ease in the change of the paroxysm; never suspecting but that the humour would have wasted itself. Dryden.

There is no question but the king of Spain will reform most of the abuses. Addison.

14. That. This seems no proper sense in this place.

It is not therefore impossible but I may alter the complexion of my play, to restore myself into the good graces of my fair criticks. Dryden.

15. Otherwise than. Obsolete.

I should sin
To think but nobly of my grandmother. Shakspeare.

16. A particle by which the meaning of the foregoing sentence is bounded or restrained; only.

Thus fights Ulysses, thus his fame extends;
A formidable man, but to his friends. Dryd.

17. A particle of objection; yet it may be objected: It has sometimes yet with it.

But yet, Madam——
I do not like but yet; it does allay
The good precedence; fie upon but yet!
But yet is as a jaylour, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakspeare.

Must the heart then have been formed and constituted, before the blood was in being? But here again, the substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley.

18. But for; without; had not this been.

Rash man, forbear! but for some unbelief,
My joy had been as fatal as my grief. Waller.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was tied above. Dryd.

When the fair boy receiv'd the gift of right,
And, but for mischief, you had died for spite. Dryd.

BUT, bůt. n. s. [bout, French.] A boundary.

But, if I ask you what I mean by that word, you will answer, I mean this or that thing, you cannot tell which; but if I join it with the words in construction and sense, as, but I will not, a but of wine, but and boundary, the ram will but, shoot at but, the meaning of it will be as ready to you as any other word. Holder.

BUT, bůt. n. s. [In sea language.] The end of any plank which joins to another on the outside of a ship, under water. Harris.

BUT-END, bůt-ênd'. n. s. [from but and end.] The blunt end of any thing; the end upon which it rests.

The reserve of foot galled their foot with several vollies, and then fell on them with the but-ends of their muskets. Clarendon.

Thy weapon was a good one when I wielded it, but the but-end remains in my hands. Arbuthnot.

Some of the soldiers accordingly pushed them forwards, with the but-ends of their pikes, into my reach. Swift.

BU'TCHER, bůt'tshůr.[173] n. s. [boucher, Fr.]

1. One that kills animals to sell their flesh.

The shepherd and the butcher both may look upon one sheep with pleasing conceits. Sidney.

Hence he learnt the butcher's guile,
How to cut your throat, and smile;
Like a butcher doom'd for life
In his mouth to wear his knife. Swift.

2. One that is delighted with blood.

Honour and renown are bestowed on conquerors, who, for the most part, are but the great butchers of mankind. Locke.

To BU'TCHER, bůt'tshůr. v. a. [from the noun.] To kill; to murder.

In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou shew'st the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee. Shaks.

Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd. Shak.

The poison and the dagger are at hand to butcher a hero, when the poet wants brains to save him.
Dryden.

BU'TCHERS-BROOM, bůt'tshůrz-brôôm, or KNEEHOLLY. n. s. [ruscus, Lat.] A tree.

The roots are sometimes used in medicine, and the green shoots are cut and bound into bundles, and sold to the butchers, who use it as besoms to sweep their blocks; from whence it had the name of butcher's-broom. Miller.

BU'TCHERLINESS, bůt'tshůr-lê-nês. n. s. [from butcherly.] A brutal, cruel, savage, butcherly manner.

BU'TCHERLY, bůt'tshůr-lê. adj. [from butcher.] Cruel; bloody; grossly and clumsily barbarous.

Cole cabbage, and coleworts, are soft and demulcent, without any acidity; the jelly or juice of red cabbage, baked in an oven, and mixed with honey, is an excellent pectoral. Arbuthnot on Alim.

To CA'BBAGE, kâb'bîdje. v. n. To form a head; as, the plants begin to cabbage.

To CA'BBAGE, kâb'bîdje. v. a. [a cant word among taylors.] To steal in cutting clothes.

Your taylor, instead of shreads, cabbages whole yards of cloth. Arbuthnot.

CA'BBAGE-TREE, kâb'bîdje-trêê. n. s. A species of palmtree.

It is very common in the Caribbee islands, where it grows to a prodigious height. The leaves of this tree envelope each other, so that those which are inclosed, being deprived of the air, are blanched; which is the part the inhabitants cut for plaits for hats, and the young shoots are pickled: but whenever this part is cut out, the trees are destroyed; nor do they rise again from the old roots; so that there are very few trees left remaining near plantations. Miller.

CA'BBAGE-WORM, kâb'bîje-wûrm. n. s. An insect.

CA'BIN, kâb'bin. n. s. [cabane, Fr. chabin, Welsh, a cottage.]

1. A small room.

So long in secret cabin there he held
Her captive to his sensual desire,
Till that with timely fruit her belly swell'd,
And bore a boy unto a savage sire. Spenser.

2. A small chamber in a ship.

Give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready, in your cabin, for the mischance of the hour, if it so happen. Shakspeare.

Men may not expect the use of many cabins, and safety at once, in the sea service. Raleigh.

The chessboard, we say, is in the same place it was, if it remain in the same part of the cabin though the ship sails all the while. Locke.

3. A cottage, or small house.

Come from marble bow'rs, many times the gay harbour of anguish,
Unto a silly cabin, though weak, yet stronger against woes. Sidney.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed of flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their ditches. Swift.

4. A tent, or temporary habitation.

Some of green boughs their slender cabins frame,
Some lodged were Tortosa's streets about. Fairfax.

To CA'BIN, kâb'bin. v. n. [from the noun.] To live in a cabin.

I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave. Shakspeare.

To CA'BIN, kâb'bin. v. a. To confine in a cabin.

Fleance is 'scap'd; I had else been perfect,
As broad and general as the casing air;
But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,
To saucy doubts and fear. Shakspeare.

CA'BINED, kâb'bind.[362] adj. [from cabin.] Belonging to a cabin.

The nice morn, on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.

CA'BINET, kâb'in-êt. n. s. [cabinet, Fr.]

1. A closet; a small room.

At both corners of the farther side, let there be two delicate or rich cabinets, daintily paved, richly hanged, glazed with crystalline glass, and a rich cupola in the midst, and all other elegancy that may be thought on. Bacon.

2. A hut or small house.

Hearken awhile in thy green cabinet,
The laurel song of careful Colinet. Spenser.

3. A private room in which consultations are held.

You began in the cabinet what you afterwards practised in the camp. Dryden.

4. A set of boxes or drawers for curiosities; a private box.

Who sees a soul in such a body set,
Might love the treasure for the cabinet. Ben Jonson.
In vain the workman shew'd his wit,
With rings and hinges counterfeit,
To make it seem, in this disguise,
A cabinet to vulgar eyes. Swift.

5. Any place in which things of value are hidden.

Thy breast hath ever been the cabinet,
Where I have lock'd my secrets. Denham.

We cannot discourse of the secret, but by describing our duty; but so much duty must needs open a cabinet of mysteries. Taylor.

CA'BINET-COUNCIL, kâb'in-êt-kôûn'sil. n. s.

1. A council held in a private manner, with unusual privacy and confidence.

The doctrine of Italy, and practice of France, in some kings times, hath introduced cabinet-councils. Bacon.

2. A select number of privy counsellors supposed to be particularly trusted.

From the highest to the lowest it is universally read; from the cabinet-council to the nursery. Gay.

CA'BINET-MAKER, kâb'in-êt-mâ'kûr. n. s. [from cabinet and make.] One that makes small nice drawers or boxes.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs; so that they would be of great use for the cabinet-makers, as well as the turners, and others. Mortimer.

CA'BLE, kâ'bl.[405] n. s. [cabl, Welsh; cabel, Dutch.] The great rope of a ship to which the anchor is fastened.

What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot still? Shakspeare.

The length of the cable is the life of the ship in all extremities; and the reason is, because it makes so many bendings and waves, as the ship, riding at that length, is not able to stretch it; and nothing breaks that is not stretched. Raleigh.

The cables crack; the sailors fearful cries
Ascend; and sable night involves the skies. Dryden

CA'BURNS, kâ'bûrnz. n. s. Small ropes used in ships. Dict.

CA'CAO, See CHOCOLATE NUT.

CACHE'CTICAL, kâ-kêk'tė-kâl. } adj. [from CACHE'CTICK, kâ-kêk'tik. } cachexy.] Having an ill habit of body; showing an ill habit.

Young and florid blood, rather than vapid and cachectical. Arbuthnot on Air.

The crude chyle swims in the blood, and appears as milk in the blood, of some persons who are cachectic. Floyer.

CACHE'XY, kâk'kėk-sė.[517] n. s. [κακεξία.] A general word to express a great variety of symptoms: most commonly it denotes such a distemperature of the humours, as hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions; proceeding from weakness of the fibres, and an abuse of the nonnaturals, and often from severe acute distempers. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CACHINNA'TION, kâk-kin-nâ'shûn.[353] n. s. [cachinnatio, Lat.] A loud laughter. Dict.

CA'CKEREL, kâk'ûr-il.[555 99] n. s. A fish, said to make those who eat it laxative.

To CA'CKLE, kâk'kl.[405] v. n. [kaeckelen, Dutch.]

1. To make a noise as a goose.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakspeare.
Or rob the Roman geese of all their glories,
And save the state, by cackling to the tories. Pope.

2. Sometimes it is used for the noise of a hen.

The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,
This woeful cackling cry with horrour heard
Of those distracted damsels in the yard. Dryden.

3. To laugh; to giggle.

Nic grinned, cackled, and laughed, till he was like to kill himself, and fell a frisking and dancing about the room. Arbuthnot.

4. To talk idly; to prattle.

CA'CKLE, kâk'kl. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a goose or fowl.

The silver goose before the shining gate
There flew, and by her cackle sav'd the state. Dryd.

2. Idle talk; prattle.

CA'CKLER, kâk'lûr.[98] n. s. [from cackle.]

1. A fowl that cackles.

2. A telltale; a tatler.

CACOCHY'MICAL, kâk-kô-kîm'ė-kâl. } adj.
CACOCHY'MICK, kâk-kô-kîm'ik.[353 509] } [from cacochymy.] Having the humours corrupted.

It will prove very advantageous, if only cacochymick, to clarify his blood with a laxative. Harvey.

If the body be cacochymical, the tumours are apt to degenerate into very venomous and malignant abscesses. Wiseman.

The ancient writers distinguished putrid fevers, by putrefaction of blood, choler, melancholy, and phlegm; and this is to be explained by an effervescence happening in a particular cacochymical blood. Floyer.

CACOCHY'MY, kâk'kô-kim-mė. n. s. [κακοχυμία.] A depravation of the humours from a sound state, to what the physicians call by a general name of a cacochymy. Spots, and discolorations of the skin, are signs of weak fibres; for the lateral vessels, which lie out of the road of circulation, let gross humours pass, which could not, if the vessels had their due degree of stricture. Arbuthnot.

Strong beer, a liquor that attributes the half of its ill qualities to the hops, consisting of an acrimonious fiery nature, sets the blood, upon the least cacochymy, into an orgasmus. Harvey.

CACO'PHONY, kâ-kŏf'ò-nè.[518] n. s. [κακοφωνία.] A bad sound of words.

These things shall lie by, till you come to carp at them, and alter rhimes, grammar, triplets, and cacophonies of all kinds. Pope to Swift.

To CACU'MINATE, kâ-kû'mè-nâte. v. a. [cacumino, Lat.] To make sharp or pyramidal. Dict.

CADA'VEROUS, kâ-dâv'è-rûs. adj. [cadaver, Lat.] Having the appearance of a dead carcass; having the qualities of a dead carcass.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, for fear of any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves. Brown.

The urine, long detained in the bladder, as well as glass, will grow red, foetid, cadaverous, and alkaline. The case is the same with the stagnant waters of hydropical persons. Arbuthnot.

CA'DDIS, kâd'dîs. n. s. [This word is used in Erse for the variegated clothes of the Highlanders.]

1. A kind of tape or ribbon.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, caddises, cambricks, lawns; why, he sings them over as if they were gods and goddesses. Shak.

2. A kind of worm or grub found in a case of straw.

He loves the mayfly, which is bred of the codworm, or caddis; and these make the trout bold and lusty. Walton's Angler.

CADE, kâde. adj. [It is deduced, by Skinner, from cadeler, Fr. an old word, which signifies to breed up tenderly.] Tame; soft; delicate; as, a cade lamb, a lamb bred at home.

To CADE, kâde. v. a. [from the noun.] To breed up in softness.

CADE, kâde. n. s. [cadus, Lat.] A barrel.

We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father.
——Or rather of stealing a cade of herrings. Shaksp.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells
Of close press'd husks is freed, thou must refrain
Thy thirsty soul; let none persuade to broach
Thy thick, unwholesome, undigested cades. Philips.

CADE-WORM, kâde'wûrm. n. s. The same with caddis.

CA'DENCE, kâ'dênse. } n. s. [cadence, Fr.]
CA'DENCY, kâ'dên-sè. }

1. Fall; state of sinking; decline.

Now was the sun in western cadence low
From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hours,
To fan the earth, now wak'd. Milton.

2. The fall of the voice; sometimes the general modulation of the voice.

The sliding, in the close or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetorick, which they call præter expectatum; for there is a pleasure even in being deceived. Bacon.

There be words not made with lungs,
Sententious show'rs! O let them fall!
Their cadence is rhetorical. Crashaw.

3. The flow of verses, or periods.

The words, the versification, and all the other elegancies of sound, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, perform exactly the same office both in dramatick and epick poetry. Dryden.

The cadency of one line must be a rule to that of the next; as the sound of the former must slide gently into that which follows. Dryden.

4. The tone or sound.

Hollow rocks retain
The sound of blust'ring winds, which all night long
Had rous'd the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull
Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd. Milton.

He hath a confus'd remembrance of words since he left the university; he hath lost half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence. Swift.

5. In horsemanship.

Cadence is an equal measure or proportion which a horse observes in all his motions, when he is thoroughly managed. Farrier's Dict.

CA'DENT, kâ'dênt. adj. [cadens, Lat.] Falling down.

CADE'T, kâ-dêt'. n. s. [cadet, Fr. pronounced cadé.]

1. The younger brother.

2. The youngest brother.

Joseph was the youngest of the twelve, and David the eleventh son, and the cadet of Jesse. Brown.

3. A volunteer in the army, who serves in expectation of a commission.

CA'DEW, kâ-dû'. n. s. A straw worm. See CADDIS. Dict.

CA'DGER, kâd'jûr. n. s. [from cadge, or cage, a panier.] A huckster; one who brings butter, eggs, and poultry, from the country to market.

CA'DI, kâ'dè. n. s. A magistrate among the Turks, whose office seems nearly to answer to that of a justice of peace.

CADI'LLACK, kâ-dîl'lâk. n. s. A sort of pear.

CÆ'CIAS, sè'sè-âz. n. s. [Lat.] A wind from the north-east.

Now from the north,
Boreas and Cæcias, and Argestes loud,
And Thracias, rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

CÆSA'REAN, sè-zâ'rè-ân. See CESARIAN.

CÆSU'RA, sè-zû'râ.[479] [480] n. s. [Lat.] A figure in poetry, by which a short syllable after a complete foot is made long.

CA'FTAN, kâf'tân. n. s. [Persick.] A Persian or Turkish vest or garment.

CAG, kâg. n. s. A barrel or wooden vessel, containing four or five gallons. Sometimes keg.

CAGE, kâje. n. s. [cage, Fr. from cavea, Lat.]

1. An inclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.

See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure you are not a prisoner. Shakspeare.

Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,
They lost their genius, and poetick rage;
Homers again and Pindars may be found,
And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Waller.

And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing birds in silver cages hung;
And ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
Were sorted well, with lumps of amber laid betwe Dryd.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembrance garment; a beast, bird, or fish, by the cage, or yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept.

The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.

2. A place for wild beasts, inclosed with pallisadoes.

3. A prison for petty malefactors.

To CAGE, kâje. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cage.

He swoln, and pamper'd, with high fare,
Sits down, and snorts, cag'd in his basket chair. Donne.

CAI'MAN, kâ'mân.[88] n. s. The American name of a crocodile.

To CAJO'LE, kâ-jôle'. v. a. [cageoller, Fr.] To flatter; to sooth; to coax: a low word.

Thought he 'tis no mean part of civil,
State prudence, to cajole the devil. Hudibras.

The one affronts him, while the other cajoles and pities him: takes up his quarrel, shakes his head at it, claps his hand upon his breast, and then protests and protests. L'Estrange.

My tongue that wanted to cajole
I try'd, but not a word would troll. Rymer.

CAJO'LER, kâ-jô'lûr. n. s. [from cajole.] A flatterer; a wheedler.

CAJO'LERY, kâ-jô'lûr-rè.[555] n. s. [cajolerie, Fr.] Flattery.

CA'ISSON, kâ-sône'. n. s. [French.]

1. A chest of bombs or powder, laid in the enemy's way, to be fired at their approach.

2. A wooden case in which the piers of bridges are built within the water.

CAI'TIFF, kâ'tîf. n. s. [cattivo, Ital. a slave; whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; as knave in English, and fur in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue.

Ἡμισυ της αρετης αποαινυται δουλιον ημαρ. Homer.

A slave and a scoundrel are signified by the same words in many languages.] A mean villain; a despicable knave; it often implies a mixture of wickedness and misery.

Vile caitiff! vassal of dread and despair,
Unworthy of the common breathed air!
Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And dost not unto death thyself prepare? Spenser.

'Tis not impossible
But one, the wicked'st caitiff on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo. Shakspeare.

The wretched caitiff, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his story to himself. Hudibras.

CAKE, kâke. n. s. [cuch, Teutonick.]

1. A kind of delicate bread.

You must be seeing christenings! do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals? Shakspeare.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest,
Out of hope of all but my share of the feast. Shaksp.

The dismal day was come; the priests prepare.
Their leaven'd cakes, and fillets for my hair. Dryden.

2. Any thing of a form rather flat than high; by which it is sometimes distinguished from a loaf.

There is a cake that groweth upon the side of a dead tree, that hath gotten no name, but it is large, and of a chestnut colour, and hard and pithy. Bacon.

. Concreted matter; coagulated matter.

Then when the fleecy skies new cloath the wood,
And cakes of rustling ice come rolling down the flood. Dryden.

To CAKE, kâke. v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely, had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it. Addison.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elflocks in foul sluttish hairs. Shaksp.

He rins'd the wound,
And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood,
That cak'd within. Addison.

CALABA'SH Tree, kål'å-bâsh-trēė.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided at the brim into several parts; from whose cup rises the pointal, in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West-Indies, where they grow naturally. The shells are used by the negroes for cups, as also for making instruments of music, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle. Miller.

CALAMA'NCO, kål-å-mång'kō. n. s. [a word derived, probably by some accident, from calamancus, Lat. which, in the middle ages, signified a hat.] A kind of woollen stuff.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary, had a red coat, flung open to show a calamanco waistcoat. Tatler.

CA'LAMINE, or Lapis Calaminaris, kål'å-mine.[149] n. s. A kind of fossile bituminous earth, which, being mixed with copper, changes it into brass.

We must not omit those, which, though not of so much beauty, yet are of greater use, viz. loadstones, whetstones of all kinds, limestones, calamine, or lapis calaminaris. Locke.

CA'LAMINT, kål'å-mint. n. s. [calamintha, Lat.] The name of a plant.

CALA'MITOUS, kå-lâm'ė-tûs. adj. [calamitosus, Lat.]

1. Miserable; involved in distress; oppressed with infelicity; unhappy; wretched: applied to men.

This is a gracious provision God Almighty hath made in favour of the necessitous and calamitous; the state of some, in this life, being so extremely wretched and deplorable, if compared with others. Calamy.

2. Full of misery; distressful: applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague. Harvey on Consumptions.

Strict necessity
Subdues me, and calamitous constraint!
Lest on my head both sin and punishment,
However insupportable, be all
Devolv'd. Milton.

Much rather I shall chuse
To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,
And be in that calamitous prison left. Milton.

In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppressour would have even revived them. South.

CALA'MITOUSNESS, kå-lâm'ė-tûs-nės. n. s. [from calamitous.] Misery; distress.

CALA'MITY, kå-lâm'ė-tė. n. s. [calamitas, Lat.]

1. Misfortune; cause of misery; distress.

Another ill accident is drought, and the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; insomuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.

2. Misery; distress.

This infinite calamity shall cause
To human life, and household peace confound. Milt.

From adverse shores in safety let her hear
Foreign calamity, and distant war;
Of which, great heav'n, let her no portion bear. Prior.

CA'LAMUS, kål'å-mûs. n. s. [Lat.] A sort of reed or sweet-scented wood, mentioned in scripture with the other ingredients of the sacred perfumes. It is a knotty root, reddish without, and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies. The prophets speak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. These sweet reeds have no smell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their smell is perceived upon entering the marshes. Calmet.

Take thou also unto thee principal spices of pure myrrh, of sweet cinnamon, and of sweet calamus. Exodus, xxx. 23.

CALA'SH, kå-lâsh'. n. s. [caleche, Fr.] A small carriage of pleasure.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to slash
The vig'rous steeds, that drew his lord's calash. King.

The ancients used calashes, the figures of several of them being to be seen on ancient monuments. They are very simple, light, and drove by the traveller himself. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CA'LCEATED, kål'shė-å-tėd.[450] adj. [calceatus, Lat.] Shod; fitted with shoes.

CALCEDO'NIUS, kål-sė-dō'nė-ûs. n. s. [Lat.] A kind of precious stone.

Calcedonius is of the agate kind, and of a misty grey, clouded with blue, or with purple. Woodward.

To CA'LCINATE, kål'sė-nåte. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath these degrees; first, it indurateth, then maketh fragile, and lastly it doth calcinate. Bacon.

CALCINA'TION, kål-sė-nå'shûn. n. s. [from calcine; calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtile particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers residences of bodies are thrown away, as soon as the distillation or calcination of the body that yieldeth them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by art into a subtile powder. Brown.

CALCI'NATORY, kål-sîn'å-tûr-ė.[512] n. s. [from calcinate.] A vessel used in calcination.

To CALCI'NE, kål-sine'. v. a. [calciner, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance. See CALCINATION.

The solids seem to be earth, bound together with some oil; for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being immersed in oil, it will grow firm again. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To burn up.

Fiery disputes that union have calcin'd,
Almost as many minds as men we find. Denham.

To CALCI'NE, kål-sine'. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This chrystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and, in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion. Newton's Opticks.

To CA'LCULATE, kål'kû-låte. v. a. [calculer, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little stone or bead, used in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon: as, he calculates his expences.

2. To compute the situation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth
And told me, that by water I should die. Shakspeare.

Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why old men, fools, and children calculate,
Why all those things change from their ordinance?
Shakspeare.

Who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches. Bentley.

3. To adjust; to project for any certain end.

The reasonableness of religion clearly appears, as it tends so directly to the happiness of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillots.

To CA'LCULATE, kål'kû-låte. v. n. To make a computation.

CALCULA'TION, kål-kû-lå'shûn. n. s. [from calculate.]

1. A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering.

Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation into easy computation. Holder on Time.

2. A reckoning; the result of arithmetical operation.

If then their calculation be true, for so they reckon. Hooker.

Being different from calculations of the ancients, their observations confirm not ours. Brown.

CALCULA'TOR, kål'kû-lå-tûr.[521] n. s. [from calculate.] A computer; a reckoner.

CA'LCULATORY, kål'kû-lå-tûr-ė.[512] adj. [from calculate.] Belonging to calculation.

CA'LCULE, kål'kûle. n. s. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning; compute: obsolete.

The general calcule, which was made in the last perambulation, exceeded eight millions. Howel.

CA'LCULOSE, kål-kû-lōse'. } adj. [from cal-
CA'LCULOUS, kål'kû-lûs. } culus, Lat.] Stony; gritty.

The volatile salt of urine will coagulate spirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the stones, or calculose concretions in the kidneys or bladder, may be produced. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculous person, that the stone is formed earlier than I have suggested. Sharp.

CA'LCULUS, kål'kû-lûs. n. s. [Latin.] The stone in the bladder.

CA'LENTURE, kȧl'ĕn-tshŭre.[461] n. s. [from caleo, Lat.] A distemper peculiar to sailors in hot climates; wherein they imagine the sea to be green fields, and will throw themselves into it. Quincy.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,
But to be cast into a calenture. Denham.

So, by a calenture misled,
The mariner with rapture sees,
On the smooth ocean's azure bed,
Enamell'd fields, and verdant trees:
With eager haste he longs to rove
In that fantastic scene, and thinks
It must be some enchanted grove;
And in he leaps, and down he sinks. Swift.

CALF, kȧf.[401 78] n. s. calves in the plural. [cealf, Saxon; kalf, Dutch.]

1. The young of a cow.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon's Natural History.

Acosta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condore, which will kill and eat up a whole calf at a time. Wilkins.

Ah, Blouzelind! I love thee more by half
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay.

2. Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple. Calmet.

Turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips. Hosea, xiv. 2.

3. By way of contempt and reproach, applied to a human being; a dolt; a stupid wretch.

When a child haps to be got,
That after proves an ideot;
When folk perceive it thriveth not,
Some silly doating brainless calf,
That understands things by the half
Says, that the fairy left the oaf,
And took away the other. Drayton's Nymphid

4. The thick, plump, bulbous part of the leg. [kalf, Dutch.]

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,
And all her calf into a gouty small. Suckling.

To CALK, kȧwk. v. a. [from calage, Fr. hemp, with which leaks are stopped; or from cæle, Sax. the keel. Skinner.] To stop the leaks of a ship.

There is a great errour committed in the manner of calking his majesty's ships; which being done with rotten oakum, is the cause that they are leaky. Raleigh's Essays.

So here some pick out bullets from the side;
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift;
Their left hand does the calking iron guide,
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

CA'LKER, kȧw'kŭr. n. s. [from calk.] The workman that stops the leaks of a ship.

The ancients of Gebal, and the wise men thereof, were in thee thy calkers; all the ships of the sea, with their mariners, were in thee to occupy thy merchandize. Ezekiel, xxvii. 9.

CA'LKING, kȧw'kĭng. n. s. A term in painting, used where the backside is covered with black lead, or red chalk, and the lines traced through on a waxed plate, wall, or other matter, by passing lightly over each stroke of the design with a point, which leaves an impression of the colour on the plate or wall. Chambers.

To CALL, kȧwl.[77] v. a. [calo, Lat. kalder, Danish.]

1. To name, to denominate.

And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night. Genesis, i. 5.

2. To summon, or invite, to or from any place, thing, or person. It is often used with local particles, as up, down, in, out, off.

Why came not the slave back to me when I called him? Shakspeare's King Lear.

Are you call'd forth from out a world of men,
To slay the innocent? Shakspeare's Richard III.

Lodronius, that famous captain, was called up, and told by his servants that the general was fled. Knolles's History.

Or call up him that left half told
The story of Cambuscan bold. Milton.

Drunkenness calls off the watchmen from their towers; and then evils proceed from a loose heart, and an untied tongue. Taylor's Holy Living.

The soul makes use of her memory, to call to mind what she is to treat of. Duppa's Rules.

Such fine employments our whole days divide;
The salutations of the morning tide
Call up the sun; those ended, to the hall
We wait the patron, hear the lawyers bawl. Dryd.

Then by consent abstain from further toils,
Call off the dogs, and gather up the spoils. Addison.

By the pleasures of the imagination or fancy, I mean such as arise from visible objects, when we call up their ideas into our minds by paintings, statues, or descriptions. Addison's Spectator.

Why dost thou call my sorrows up afresh?
My father's name brings tears into my eyes. Addison.

The king had sent for the earl to return home, where he should be called to account for all his miscarriages. Clarendon.

Once a day, especially in the early years of life and study, call yourselves to an account, what new ideas, what new proposition or truth, you have gained. Watts.

5. To summon by command.

In that day did the lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth. Isaiah, xxii. 12.

6. In the theological sense, to inspire with ardours of piety, or to summon into the church.

Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God. Romans.

7. To invoke; to appeal to.

I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth. 2 Cor.

8. To appeal to.

When that lord perplexed their counsels and designs with inconvenient objections in law, the authority of the lord Manchester, who had trod the same paths, was still called upon. Clarendon.

9. To proclaim; to publish.

Nor ballad-singer, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet, and loud,
Nor parish clerk, who calls the psalm so clear. Gay.

10. To excite; to put in action; to bring into view.

He swells with angry pride,
And calls forth all his spots on every side. Cowley.

See Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
And call new beauties forth from ev'ry line. Pope.

11. To stigmatize with some opprobrious denomination.

Deafness unqualifies me for all company, except friends; whom I can call names, if they do not speak loud enough. Swift to Pope.

12. To call back. To revoke; to retract.

He also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words; but will arise against the house of the evil doers; and against the help of them that work iniquity. Isaiah, xxxi. 2.

13. To call for. To demand; to require; to claim.

Madam, his majesty doth call for you,
And for your grace, and you, my noble lord. Shaks.

You see how men of merit are sought after; the undeserver may sleep, when a man of action is called for. Shakspeare.

Among them he a spirit of phrensy sent,
Who hurt their minds,
And urg'd you on, with mad desire,
To call in haste for their destroyer. Milton.

For master, or for servant here to call,
Was all alike; where only two were all. Dryden.

He commits every sin that his appetite calls for, or perhaps his constitution or fortune can bear. Rogers.

14. To call in. To resume money at interest.

Horace describes an old usurer, as so charmed with the pleasures of a country life, that, in order to make a purchase, he called in all his money; but what was the event of it? why, in a very few days after, he put it out again. Addison's Spectator.

15. To call in. To resume any thing that is in other hands.

If clipped money be called in all at once, and stopped from passing by weight, I fear it will stop trade. Locke.

Neither is any thing more cruel and oppressive in the French government, than the practice of calling in their money, after they have sunk it very low, and then coining it anew, at a higher value. Swift.

16. To call in. To summon together; to invite.

The heat is past, follow me no farther now;
Call in the pow'rs, good cousin Westmoreland. Shakspeare.

18. To call out. To challenge; to summon to fight.

When their sov'reign's quarrel calls 'em out,
His foes to mortal combat they defy. Dryden.

To CALL, kâwl. v. n.

1. To stop without intention of staying. This meaning probably rose from the custom of denoting one's presence at the door by a call; but it is now used with great latitude. This sense is well enough preserved by the particles on or at; but is forgotten, and the expression made barbarous, by in.

2. To make a short visit.

And, as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him, with the tribunes, to come to me. Ben Jonson.

He ordered her to call at his house once a week, which she did for some time after, when he heard no more of her. Temple.

That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I first of all called in at St. James's. Addis.

We called in at Morge, where there is an artificial port. Addison on Italy.

3. To call on. To solicit for a favour, or a debt.

I would be loth to pay him before his day; what need I be so forward with him, that calls not on me? Shakspeare's Henry IV.

4. To call on. To repeat solemnly.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the shore, and, calling thrice on their names, raised a cenotaph, or empty monument, to their memories. Broome on the Odyssey.

5. To call upon. To implore; to pray to.

Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Psalm i. 15.

CALL, kâwl. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address of summons or invitation.

But death comes not at call, justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace for pray'rs or cries. Milton.

But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain,
The wond'ring forests soon should dance again;
The moving mountains hear the powerful call,
And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall. Pope.

2. Requisition authoritative and public.

It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence, of a number of mean persons. Hooker's Preface.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion.

Yet he at length, time to himself best known,
Rememb'ring Abraham, by some wond'rous call,
May bring them back repentant and sincere. Milton.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse.

How justly then will impious mortals fall,
Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call! Roscommon.

Those who to empire by dark paths aspire,
Still plead a call to what they most desire. Dryden.

St. Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong; but yet it was he, and not they, who were mistaken. Locke.

5. Authority; command.

Oh, Sir! I wish he were within my call, or yours. Denham.

6. A demand; a claim.

Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity, and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity, than any other motive whatsoever. Addison.

7. An instrument to call birds.

For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are represented. Wilkins.

8. Calling; vocation; employment.

Now through the land his cure of souls he stretch 'd
And like a primitive apostle preach'd:
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call,
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.

9. A nomination.

Upon the sixteenth was held the serjeants feast at Ely place, there being nine serjeants of that call. Bacon.

CA'LLAT, CA'LLET, } kâl'lêt. { n. s. A trull.

He call'd her whore: a beggar, in his drink,
Could not have laid such terms upon his callet. Shakspeare.

CA'LLING, kâwl'lîng. n. s. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profession; trade.

If God has interwoven such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superiour must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life? Surely, as much as Christianity is nobler than a trade. South.

We find ourselves obliged to go on in honest industry in our callings. Rogers.

I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your sermons; because many of your calling have made themselves ridiculous by attempting it. Swift.

I left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd. Pope.

2. Proper station, or employment.

The Gauls found the Roman senators ready to die with honour in their callings. Swift.

3. Class of persons united by the same employment or profession.

It may be a caution to all christian churches and magistrates, not to impose celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposable to have the gift of continence. Hammond.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion.

Give all diligence, to make your calling and election sure. 2 Peter, i. 10.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles. Hakewill on Providence.

CA'LLIPERS, kâl'lê'pûrz.[98] n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology; nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, enclosed, or embraced.] Compasses with bowed shanks.

Calippers measure the distance of any round, cylyndrick, conical body, so that when workmen use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CALLO'SITY, kâl-lôs'sê-tê. n. s. [callosité, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin by hard labour; and therefore when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow so, they are said to be callous. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce funguses; or as they harden, and produce callosities; in the first case, wine and spirituous liquors are useful, in the last hurtful. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CA'LLOUS, kål'lûs. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up.

In progress of time, the ulcers became sinuous and callous, with induration of the glands. Wiseman.

2. Hardened; insensible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the conscience is grown callous. L'Estrange.

The wretch is drench'd too deep;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep;
Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross,
He sins, and sees not, senseless of his loss. Dryden.

CA'LLOUSNESS, kål'lûs-nês. n. s. [from callous.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.

The oftener we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callousness grows upon it. Cheyne.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteemed destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness and numbness of soul. Bentley.

CA'LLOW, kål'lô. adj. Unfledged; naked; without feathers

Bursting with kindly rapture, forth disclos'd
Their callow young. Milton.

Then as an eagle, who with pious care
Was beating widely on the wing for prey,
To her now silent airy does repair,
And finds her callow infants forced away. Dryd.

How in small flights they know to try their young,
And teach the callow child her parent's song. Prior.

CA'LLUS, kål'lûs. n. s. [Latin.]

1. An induration of the fibres.

2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM, kåm.[80] adj. [calme, Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous: applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and through the trembling air
Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play
A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay
Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair. Spenser.

So shall the sea be calm unto us. Jonah.

2. Undisturbed; unruffled: applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightening men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,
Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears. Pope.

CALM, kåm. n. s.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion: used of the elements.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Raleigh.

Every pilot
Can steer the ship in calms; but he performs
The skilful part, can manage it in storms. Denham.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose; applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms; and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards: since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

To CALM, kåm. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy, in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus. Dryd.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as much exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms, within our breasts. Decay of Piety.

Those passions, which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened. Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,
The sacred rites and hecatombs to pay,
And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope.

CA'LMER, kåm'ûr.[403] n. s. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Walton.

CA'LMLY, kåm'lê. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenely.

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. Bacon.

His curled brows
Frown on the gentle stream, which calmly flows. Denham.

2. Without passions; quietly.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair;
Soft fell her words, as flew the air. Prior.

CA'LMNESS, kåm'nês. n. s. [from calm.]

1. Tranquillity; serenity; not storminess.

While the steep horrid roughness of the wood
Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood. Den.

2. Mildness; freedom from passion.

Sir, 'tis fit
You have strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence: all 's in anger. Shak.

I beg the grace,
You would lay by those terrours of your face;
Till calmness to your eyes you first restore,
I am afraid, and I can beg no more. Dryden.

CA'LMY, kåm'ê. adj. [from calm.] Calm; peaceful. Not used.

And now they nigh approached to the sted
Where as those mermaides dwelt: it was a still
And calmy bay, on one side sheltered
With the broad shadow of an hoary hill. Fairy Q.

CA'LOMEL, kål'ô-mêl. n. s. [calomelas, a chymical word.] Mercury six times sublimed.

1. An instrument made with three spikes, so that which way soever it falls to the ground, one of them points upright to wound horses feet.

The ground about was thick sown with caltrops, which very much incommoded the shoeless Moors. Dr. Addison's Account of Tangiers.

2. A plant common in France, Spain, and Italy, where it grows among corn, and is very troublesome; for the fruit being armed with strong prickles, run into the feet of the cattle. This is certainly the plant mentioned in Virgil's Georgick, under the name of tribulus. Miller.

To CALVE, kåv.[78] v. n. [from calf.]

1. To bring a calf: spoken of a cow.

When she has calv'd, then set the dam aside,
And for the tender progeny provide. Dryd.

2. It is used metaphorically for any act of bringing forth: and sometimes of men, by way of reproach.

I would they were barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd; not Romans, as they are not,
Though calved in the porch o' th' capitol. Shaksp.

The grassy clods now calv'd; now half appear'd
The tawny lion, pawing to get free
His hinder parts. Milton.

CALVES-SNOUT, kåvz'snôût.[318] [antirrhinum.] A plant. Snapdragon.

CALVILLE, kårl'vêle. n. s. [French.] A sort of apple.

To CALU'MNIATE, kå-lûm'nê-âte.[91] v. n. [calumnior, Lat.] To accuse falsely; to charge without just ground.

Beauty, wit, high birth, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subject all
To envious and calumniating time. Shakspeare.

He mixes truth with falsehood, and has not forgotten the rule of calumniating strongly, that something may remain. Dryden's Fables.

Do I calumniate? thou ungrateful Vanoc!—
Perfidious prince!—Is it a calumny
To say that Gwendolen, betroth'd to Yver,
Was by her father first assur'd to Valens? A. Philips.

To CALU'MNIATE, kå-lûm'nê-âte.[91] v. a. To slander.

One trade or art, even those that should be the most liberal, make it their business to disdain and calumniate another. Spratt.

CALUMNIA'TION, kå-lûm-nê-â'shûn. n. s. [from calumniate.] That which we call calumniation, is a malicious and false representation of an enemy's words or actions, to an offensive purpose. Ayliffe.

CALUMNIA'TOR, kå-lûm'nê-â-tûr.[521] n. s. [from calumniate.] A forger of accusation; a slanderer.

He that would live clear of the envy and hatred of potent calumniators, must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink-pot. L'Estrange.

At the same time that Virgil was celebrated by Gallus, we know that Bavius and Mœvius were his declared foes and calumniators. Addison.

CALU'MNIOUS, kå-lûm'nê-ûs. adj. [from calumny.] Slanderous; falsely reproachful.

Virtue itself 'scapes not calumnious strokes. Shakspeare.

With calumnious art
Of counterfeited truth, thus held their ears. Milt.

CA'LUMNY, kål'ûm-nė. n. s. [calumnia, Lat.] Slander; false charge; groundless accusation: with against, or sometimes upon, before the person accused.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow,
Thou shalt not escape calumny. Shakspeare.

It is a very hard calumny upon our soil or climate, to affirm, that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

CALX, kålks. n. s. [Latin.] Any thing that is rendered reducible to powder by burning.

Gold, that is more dense than lead, resists peremptorily all the dividing powder of fire; and will not be reduced into a calx, or lime, by such operation as reduces lead into it. Digby.

CA'LYCLE, kål'ė-kl.[405] n. s. [calyculus, Lat.] A small bud of a plant. Dict.

CAMA'IEU, kå-må'yôô. n. s. [from camachuia; which name is given by the orientals to the onyx, when, in preparing it, they find another colour.]

1. A stone with various figures and representations of landskips, formed by nature.
2. [In painting.] A term used where there is only one colour, and where the lights and shadows are of gold, wrought on a golden or azure ground. This kind of work is chiefly used to represent basso relievos. Chambers.

CA'MBER, kåm'bûr. n. s. [See CAMBERING.] A term among workmen.

Camber, a piece of timber cut arching, so as, a weight considerable being set upon it, it may in length of time be induced to a straight. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CA'MBERING, kåm'bûr-ing. n. s. A word mentioned by Skinner, as peculiar to ship-builders, who say that a place is cambering, when they mean arched. [from chambre, French.]

CA'MBRICK, kåme'brik. n. s. [from Cambray, a city in Flanders where it was principally made.] A kind of fine linen, used for ruffles, women's sleeves and caps.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, caddises, cambricks, and lawns. Shak.

Rebecca had, by the use of a looking glass, and by the further use of a certain attire, made of cambrick, upon her head, attained to an evil art. Tatler.

Confed'rate in the cheat, they draw the throng,
And cambrick handkerchiefs reward the song. Gay.

CAME, kåme. The preterit of To come.

Till all the pack came up, and ev'ry hound
Tore the sad huntsman, grov'ling on the ground. Addison.

CA'MEL, kåm'ėl.[99] n. s. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries. One sort are large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pounds weight, having one bunch upon their backs. Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind are leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness; which are generally used for riding by men of quality.

Camels have large solid feet, but not hard. Camels will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomachs, for their refreshment. Calmet.

Patient of thirst and toil,
Son of the desart! even the camel feels,
Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast. Thomson.

CAME'LOPARD, kå-mėl'lo-pård. n. s. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. The Italians call him giaraffa. Trevoux.

CA'MELOT, CA'MLET, kåm'lėt.[99] n. s. [from camel.]

1. A kind of stuff originally made by a mixture of silk and camels hair; it is now made with wool and silk.

This habit was not of camels skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grograin, or the like; inasmuch as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Hair cloth.

Meantime the pastor shears their hoary beards,
And eases of their hair the loaden herds:
Their camelots warm in tents the soldier hold,
And shield the shiv'ring mariner from cold. Dryd.

CA'MERA OBSCURA, kåm'ė-rå-ôb-skû'rå. [Latin.] An optical machine used in a darkened chamber, so that the light coming only through a double convex glass, objects exposed to daylight, and opposite to the glass, are represented inverted upon any white matter placed in the focus of the glass. Martin.

CAMPE'STRAL, kåm-pės'trål. adj. [campestris, Lat.] Growing in fields.

The mountain beech is the whitest; but the campestral, or wild beech, is blacker and more durable. Mortimer.

CA'MPHIRE, kåm'fir.[140] n. s. A kind of resin produced by a chemical process from the camphire tree.

CA'MPHIRE TREE, kåm'fir-trėė. n. s. [camphora, Lat.]

There are two sorts of this tree; one is a native of the isle of Borneo, from which the best camphire is taken, which is supposed to be a natural exsudation from the tree, produced in such places where the bark of the tree has been wounded or cut. The other sort is a native of Japan, which Dr. Kempfer describes to be a kind of bay, bearing black or purple berries, from whence the inhabitants prepare their camphire, by making a simple decoction of the root and wood of this tree, cut into small pieces; but this sort of camphire is, in value, eighty or an hundred times less than the true Bornean camphire. Miller.

It is oftener used for the gum of this tree.

CA'MPHORATE, kåm'fô-råte.[91] adj. [from camphora, Lat.] Impregnated with camphire.

By shaking the saline and camphorate liquors together, we easily confounded them into one high-coloured liquor. Boyle.

CA'MPION, kăm'pė-ŭn.[166] n. s. [lychnis, Lat.] A plant.

CA'MUS, kă'mŭs. n. s. [probably from camisa, Lat.] A thin dress mentioned by Spenser.

And was yclad, for heat of scorching air,
All in silken camus, lilly white,
Purfled upon with many a folded plight. Fairy Queen.

CAN, kăn. n. s. [canne, Sax.] A cup; generally a cup made of metal, or some other matter than earth.

I hate it as an unfill'd can. Shakspeare.

One tree, the coco, affordeth stuff for housing, clothing, shipping, meat, drink, and can. Grew.

His empty can, with ears half worn away,
Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day. Dryden.

To CAN, kăn. v. n. [konnen, Dutch. It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood: as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldest do. It has no other terminations.]

1. To be able; to have power.

In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse: for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the second, not to can. Bacon.

O, there's the wonder!
Mecænas and Agrippa, who can most
With Cæsar, are his foes. Dryden.

He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond what claret and dissoluteness inspire. Locke.

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.

If she can make me blest! she only can:
Empire and wealth, and all she brings beside,
Are but the train and trappings of her love. Dryden.

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it, it is in my power; I may do it, it is allowed me: but in poetry they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it, it may or can be done.

CANA'ILLE, kă-nâle'. n. s. [French.] The lowest people; the dregs; the lees; the offscouring of the people: a French term of reproach.

1. Wine brought from the Canaries, now called sack.

I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him.——I think I shall drink in pipe wine first with him; I'll make him dance. Shakspeare.

2. An old dance.

To CANA'RY, kă-nâ'rė. v. a. A cant word, which seems to signify to dance; to frolick.

Master, will you win your love with a French brawl?—How mean'st thou, brawling in French?—No, my compleat master; but to jigg off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids. Shakspeare.

CANA'RY BIRD, kă-nâ'rė-bûrd. An excellent singing bird, formerly bred in the Canaries, and no where else; but now bred in several parts of Europe, particularly Germany.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, canary birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers other. Carew.

To CA'NCEL, kăn'sĭl.[99] v. a. [canceller, Fr. from cancellis notare, to mark with cross lines.]

1. To cross a writing.

2. To efface; to obliterate in general.

Now welcome night, thou night so long expected,
That long day's labour doth at last defray,
And all my cares which cruel love collected
Has summ'd in one, and cancelled for aye. Spenser.

Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge; repeal thee home again. Shaksp.

Thou, whom avenging pow'rs obey,
Cancel my debt, too great to pay,
Before the sad accounting day. Roscommon.

I pass the bills, my lords,
For cancelling your debts. Southerne.

CA'NCELLATED, kăn'sĕl-lă-tĕd. particip. adj. [from cancel.] Crossbarred; marked with lines crossing each other.

1. A crabfish.

2. The sign of the summer solstice.

When now no more th' alternate Twins are fir'd,
And Cancer reddens with the solar blaze,
Short is the doubtful empire of the night. Thomson.

3. A virulent swelling, or sore, not to be cured.

Any of these three may degenerate into a schirrus, and that schirrus into a cancer. Wiseman.

As when a cancer on the body feeds,
And gradual death from limb to limb proceeds;
So does the chilness to each vital part,
Spread by degrees, and creeps into the heart. Addison.

To CA'NCERATE, kăn'sûr-râte.[91] v. n. [from cancer.] To grow cancerous; to become a cancer.

But striking his fist upon the point of a nail in the wall, his hand cancerated, he fell into a fever, and soon after died on't. L'Estrange.

CANCERA'TION, kăn-sûr-râ'shŭn. n. s. [from cancerate.] A growing cancerous.

CA'NCEROUS, kăn'sûr-rŭs. adj. [from cancer.] Having the virulence and qualities of a cancer.

How they are to be treated when they are strumous, schirrous, or cancerous, you may see in their proper places. Wiseman.

The stones came candid forth, the hue of innocence. Dryden.

2. Free from malice; not desirous to find faults; fair; open; ingenuous.

The import of the discourse will, for the most part, if there be no designed fallacy, sufficiently lead candid and intelligent readers into the true meaning of it. Locke.

A candid judge will read each piece of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

CA'NDIDATE, kăn'dė-dăte. n. s. [candidatus, Lat.]

1. A competitor; one that solicits, or proposes himself for something of advancement.

So many candidates there stand for wit,
A place at court is scarce so hard to get. Anonymous.

One would be surprised to see so many candidates for glory. Addison.

2. It has generally for before the thing sought.

What could thus high thy rash ambition raise?
Art thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise? Pope.

3. Sometimes of.

Thy first fruits of poesy were giv'n
To make thyself a welcome inmate there,
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

CA'NDIDLY, kăn'dĭd-lė. adv. [from candid.] Fairly; without trick; without malice; ingenuously.

We have often desired they would deal candidly with us; for if the matter stuck only there, we would propose that every man should swear, that he is a member of the church of Ireland. Swift.

CA'NDIDNESS, kăn'dĭd-nĕs. n. s. [from candid.] Ingenuity; openness of temper; purity of mind.

It presently sees the guilt of a sinful action; and, on the other side, observes the candidness of a man's very principles, and the sincerity of his intentions. South.

To CA'NDIFY, kăn'dė-fi. v. a. [candifico, Lat.] To make white; to whiten. Dict.

CA'NDLE, kăn'dl.[405] n. s. [candela, Lat.]

1. A light made of wax or tallow, surrounding a wick of flax or cotton.

Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave king Henry light. Shakspeare.

We see that wax candles last longer than tallow candles, because wax is more firm and hard. Bacon.

Take a child, and, setting a candle before him, you shall find his pupil to contract very much, to exclude the light, with the brightness whereof it would otherwise be dazzled. Ray.

2. Light, or luminary.

By these bless'd candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think you would have begg'd
The ring of me, to give the worthy doctor. Shaksp.

CA'NDLEBERRY TREE, kăn'dl-bĕr-rė-trė̂. See SWEETWILLOW; of which it is a species.

CA'NDLEHO'LDER, kân'dl-hòld'ûr. n. s. [from candle and hold.]

1. He that holds the candle.
2. He that remotely assists.

Let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the senseless rushes with her heels;
For I am proverb'd with a grandsire phrase,
To be a candleholder, and look on. Shakspeare.

CA'NDLELIGHT, kân'dl-lite. n. s. [from candle and light.]

1. The light of a candle.

In darkness candlelight may serve to guide men's steps, which to use in the day, were madness. Hooker.

Before the day was done, her work she sped,
And never went by candlelight to bed. Dryd. Fab.

The boding owl,
Steals from her private cell by night,
And flies about the candlelight. Swift.

Such as are adapted to meals, will indifferently serve for dinners or suppers, only distinguishing between daylight and candlelight. Swift.

2. The necessary candles for use.

I shall find him coals and candlelight. Molineux to Locke.

CA'NDLEMAS, kân'dl-mûs.[88] n. s. [from candle and mass.] The feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin, which was formerly celebrated with many lights in churches.

The harvest dinners are held by every wealthy man, or, as we term it, by every good liver, between Michaelmas and Candlemas. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

There is a general tradition in most parts of Europe, that inferreth the coldness of the succeeding winter, upon shining of the sun upon Candlemas day. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Come Candlemas nine years ago she died,
And now lies bury'd by the yew-tree side. Gay.

CA'NDLESTICK, kân'dl-stîk. n s. [from candle and stick.] The instrument that holds candles.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hands; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads. Shakspeare.

These countries were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlesticks did stand. Bacon.

I know a friend, who has converted the essays of a man of quality into a kind of fringe for his candlesticks. Addison.

CA'NDLESTUFF, kân'dl-stûf. n. s. [from candle and stuff.] Any thing of which candles may be made; kitchen-stuff; grease; tallow.

By the help of oil, and wax, and other candlestuff, the flame may continue, and the wick not burn. Bacon.

CANDLEWA'STER, kân'dl-wâs-tûr. n. s. [from candle and waste.] One that consumes candles; a spendthrift.

Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk
With candlewasters. Shakspeare.

CA'NDOCK, kân'dôk. n. s. A weed that grows in rivers.

Let the pond lie dry six or twelve months, both to kill the water-weeds, as water-lilies, candocks, reate, and bulrushes; and also, that as these die for want of water, so grass may grow on the pond's bottom. Walton.

CA'NDOUR, kân'dûr.[314] n. s. [candor, Lat.] Sweetness of temper; purity of mind; openness; ingenuity; kindness.

He should have so much of natural candour and sweetness, mixed with all the improvement of learning, as might convey knowledge with a sort of gentle insinuation. Watts.

To CA'NDY, kân'dè. v. a. [probably from candare, a word used in later times for to whiten.]

1. To conserve with sugar, in such a manner as that the sugar lies in flakes, or breaks into spangles.

Should the poor be flatter'd?
No, let the candy'd tongue lick absurd pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Shakspeare.

They have in Turkey confections like to candied conserves, made of sugar and lemons, or sugar and citrons, or sugar and violets, and some other flowers, and mixture of amber. Bacon.

With candy'd plantanes, and the juicy pine,
On choicest melons and sweet grapes they dine. Waller.

2. To form into congelations.

Will the cold brook,
Candied with ice, cawdle thy morning toast,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit. Shakspeare.

3. To incrust with congelations.

Since when those frosts that winter brings,
Which candy every green,
Renew us like the teeming springs,
And we thus fresh are seen. Drayton.

To CA'NDY, kân'dè. v. n. To grow congealed.

CA'NDY Lion's foot, kân'dè. [catanance, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

CANE, kâne. n. s. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walking staffs are made; a walking staff.

Shall I to please another wine sprung mind
Lose all mine own? God hath given me a measure
Short of his cane and body: must I find
A pain in that wherein he finds a pleasure? Herbert.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane; whereupon he took his leave, and went home. Harvey.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed. They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower; and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. Chambers.

And the sweet liquor on the cane bestow,
From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow. Blackmore.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane: whence the Spanish inego de cannas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,
Of which thy age is now spectator grown;
Judge-like thou sitt'st, to praise or to arraign
The flying skirmish of the darted cane. Dryden.

4. A reed.

Food may be afforded to bees, by small canes or troughs conveyed into their hives. Mortimer.

To CANE, kâne. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a walking staff.

CANI'CULAR, kâ-nîk'û-lâr. adj. [canicularis, Lat.] Belonging to the dog-star; as, canicular, or dog days.

In regard to different latitudes, unto some the canicular days are in the winter, as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for unto them the dog-star ariseth, when the sun is about the tropick of Cancer, which season unto them is winter. Brown.

CANI'NE, kâ-nine'. adj. [caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.

A kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are scolds, who imitate the animals out of which they were taken, always busy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way. Addison.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an appetite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs; from whence it is called canine. Arbuthnot.

CA'NISTER, kân'îs-tûr.[98] n. s. [canistrum, Lat.]

1. A small basket.

White lilies in full canisters they bring,
With all the glories of the purple spring. Dryden.

2. A small vessel in which any thing, such as tea or coffee, is laid up.

CA'NKER, kâng'kûr.[409] n. s. [cancer, Lat. It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or canker might come from chancre, Fr. and cancer from the Latin.]

1. A worm that preys upon and destroys fruits.

And loathful idleness he doth detest,
The canker worm of every gentle breast. Spenser.

That which the locust hath left, hath the canker worm eaten. Joel, i. 4.

Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells; so eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Shakspeare.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him. Otway.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.

There be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and bear flies. Walton's Angler.

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes.

It is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, which, in process of time, breeds a publick poverty. Bacon.

Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth, in the estate that we leave them. Atterbury.

No longer live the cankers of my court;
All to your several states with speed resort;
Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast, and late carouse. Pope.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose; the dog-rose.

To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke. Shakspeare.

Draw a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple, a single or canker rose. Peacham.

5. An eating or corroding humour.

I am not glad, that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaister by a contemn'd revolt,
And heal th' inveterate canker of one wound
By making many. Shaksp.

6. Corrosion; virulence.

As with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind with cankers. Shaksp.

7. A disease in trees. Dict.

To CA'NKER, kâng'kûr. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow corrupt: implying something venomous and malignant.

That cunning architect of canker'd guile,
Whom princes late displeasure left in bands,
For falsed letters, and suborned wile. Fairy Queen.

I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high i' th' air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. Shaksp.

Or what the cross dire looking planet smite,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bite. Milton

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue! fly:
The Indian air is deadly to thee grown;
Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne. Dryden.

Let envious jealousy and canker'd spite
Produce my actions to severest light,
And tax my open day or secret night. Prior.

2. To decay by some corrosive or destructive principle.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding; which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable. Bacon.

To CA'NKER, kâng'kûr. v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.

Restore to God his due in tithe and time:
A tithe purloin'd cankers the whole estate. Herbert.

2. To infect; to pollute.

An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, that is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and exaction. Addison.

CA'NKERBIT, kâng'kûr-bît. particip. adj. [from canker and bit.] Bitten with an envenomed tooth.

Know, thy name is lost,
By treason's tooth baregnawn and cankerbit. Shaksp.

CA'NNABINE, kân'nâ-bine.[149] adj. [cannabinus, Lat.] Hempen. Dict.

CA'NNIBAL, kân'nė-bâl. n. s. An anthropophagite; a man-eater.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain. Bacon.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another; and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows. Davies on Ireland.

It was my hint to speak
Of the cannibals that each other eat;
The anthropophagi. Shakspeare.

The captive cannibal, opprest with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping crowd;
And spent at last, and speechless as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies. Granville.

If an eleventh commandment had been given, Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have esteemed it more difficult than all the rest? Bentley.

CA'NNIBALLY, kân'nė-bâl-lė. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corioli, he scotcht him and notcht him like a carbonado.—Had he been cannibally given, he might have broiled and eaten him too. Shaksp.

CA'NNIPERS, kân'nė-pûrz. n. s. [corrupted from callipers; which see.]

The square is taken by a pair of cannipers, or two rulers, clapped to the side of a tree, measuring the distance between them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CA'NNON, kân'ûn.[166] n. s. [cannon, Fr. from canna, Lat. a pipe, meaning a large tube.]

1. A great gun for battery.

2. A gun larger than can be managed by the hand. They are of so many sizes, that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shaksp.

He had left all the cannon he had taken; and now he sent all his great cannon to a garrison. Clarendon.

The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly. Wilkins.

CANNON-BALL, kân-nûn-bâwl'. } n. s.
CANNON-BULLET, kân-nûn-bûll'lît. } [from
CANNON-SHOT, kân-nûn-shôt'. } cannon, ball, bullet, and shot.] The balls which are shot from great guns.

He reckons those for wounds that are made by bullets, although it be a cannon-shot. Wiseman.

Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, it must strike successively the two sides of the room. Locke.

To CANNONA'DE, kân-nûn-nâde'. v. a. [from cannon.] To play the great guns; to batter or attack with great guns.

Both armies cannonaded all the ensuing day. Tatler.

To CANNONA'DE, kân-nûn-nâde'. v. a. To fire upon with cannon.

CANNONI'ER, kân-nûn-nėėr.[278] n. s. [from cannon.] The engineer that manages the cannon.

Give me the cup;
And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,
The trumpets to the cannonier without,
The cannons to the heav'ns, the heav'ns to earth. Shakspeare.

A third was a most excellent cannonier, whose good skill did much endamage the forces of the king. Hayward.

CA'NNOT, kân'nôt. A word compounded of can and not; noting inability.

I cannot but believe many a child can tell twenty, long before he has any idea of infinity at all. Locke.

CANO'A, } kân-nôô'. } n. s. A boat made by CANOE', } } cutting the trunk of a tree into a hollow vessel.

Others made rafts of wood; others devised the boat of one tree, called the canoa, which the Gauls, upon the Rhone, used in assisting the transportation of Hannibal's army. Raleigh.

In a war against Semiramis, they had four thousand monoxyla, or canoes of one piece of timber. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CA'NON, kân'ûn.[166] n. s. [κάνων.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all men's hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or no. Hooker.

His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by. Hooker.

Religious canons, civil laws, are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shaksp.

Canons in logick are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined. Watts.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law is that law, which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod, of the church. Ayliffe.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them by the canons of Ancyra. Stilling fleet.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture. Ayliffe.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches.

For deans and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, they were of great use in the church: they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government, in causes ecclesiastical. Bacon.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.
A canon! that 's a place too mean:
No, doctor, you shall be a dean;
Two dozen canons round your stall,
And you the tyrant o'er them all. Swift.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries. Ayliffe.

6. Canons Secular. Lay canons, who have been, as a mark of honour, admitted into some chapters.

7. [Among chirurgeons.] An instrument used in sewing up wounds. Dict.

8. A large sort of printing letter, probably so called from being first used in printing a book of canons; or perhaps from its size, and therefore properly written cannon.

CA'NON BIT, kân'ûn-bît. n. s. That part of the bit let into the horse's mouth.

A goodly person, and could manage fair
His stubborn steed with canon bit,
Who under him did trample as the air. Spenser.

CA'NONESS, kân'ûn-nės. n. s. [canonissa, low Lat.]

There are, in popish countries, women they call secular canonesses, living after the example of secular canons. Ayliffe.

CANO'NICAL, kâ-nôn'ė-kâl. adj. [canonicus, low Lat.]

1. According to the canon.

2. Constituting the canon.

Public readings there are of books and writings, not canonical, whereby the church doth also preach, or openly make known, the doctrine of virtuous conversation. Hooker.

No such book was found amongst those canonical scriptures. Raleigh.

3. Regular; stated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David: from this definite number some ages of the church took their pattern for their canonical hours. Taylor.

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canonical obedience. Ayliffe.

CANO'NICALLY, kâ-nôn'ė-kâl-lė. adv. [from canonical.] In a manner agreeable to the canon.

It is a known story of the friar, who, on a fasting day, bid his capon be carp, and then very canonically eat it. Government of the Tongue.

CANO'NICALNESS, kâ-nôn'ė-kâl-nės. n. s. [from canonical.] The quality of being canonical.

CA'NONIST, kân'nûn-nîst.[166] n. s. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife; thinking of the fifteenth canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canonists, Matrimonium inter episcopum & ecclesiam esse contractum, &c. Camden's Remains.

Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell
In what commandment's large contents they dwell. Pope.

CANONIZA'TION, kân-nò-nė-zâ'shûn. n. s. [from canonize.] The act of declaring any man a saint.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in canonizations. Addison.

To CA'NONIZE, kân'nò-nize. v. a. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster celestial honour, became suitor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry VI. for a saint. Bacon.

By those hymns all shall approve
Us canoniz'd for love. Donne.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints. Stillingfleet.

CA'NONRY, kân'ûn-rè. } n. s. [from ca-
CA'NONSHIP, kân'ûn-shîp. } non.] An ecclesiastical benefice in some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or a stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it. Ayliffe.

CA'NOPIED, kân'ò-pîd'.[282] adj. [from canopy.] Covered with a canopy.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank,
With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

CA'NOPY, kân'ò-pè. n. s. [canopeum, low Lat.] A covering of state over a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought into a paled green,
And placed under a stately canopy,
The warlike feats of both those knights to see. Fairy Queen.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy,
And summon'd every restless eye to sleep. Fairfax.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies, and beds of state. Dryden.

To CA'NOPY, kân'ò-pè. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,
Like friends did all embrace;
And their large branches did display
To canopy the place. Dryden.

CA'NOROUS, kâ-nò'rûs.[512] adj. [canorus, Lat.] Musical; tuneful.

Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throats, and short. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CANT, kânt. n. s. [probably from cantus, Lat. implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quaint.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds.
2. A particular form of speaking, peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the cant of any profession. Dryden.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which had taken possession of the people's minds in the time of the great rebellion. Addison's Freeholder.

Astrologers, with an old paltry cant, and a few pot-hooks for planets, to amuse the vulgar, have too long been suffered to abuse the world. Swift.

A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer for a most judicious and formidable critick. Addison.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, in formal and affected terms.

Of promise prodigal, while power you want,
And preaching in the self-denying cant. Dryd.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of some late authors, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the most ruinous corruption in any language. Swift.

5. Auction.

Numbers of these tenants, or their descendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives. Swift.

To CANT, kânt. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions; or in any kind of formal, affected language; or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant about materia and forma; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or sound, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry. Glanville.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristical note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party. Sanderson.

The busy, subtile serpents of the law
Did first my mind from true obedience draw;
While I did limits to the king prescribe,
And took for oracle that canting tribe. Roscommon.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,
Like canting rascals, how the wars will go. Dryd.

CANTA'TA, kân-tà'tâ. n. s. [Ital.] A song.

CANTA'TION, kân-tà'shûn. n. s. [from canto, Lat.] The act of singing.

CA'NTER, kân'tûr.[98] n. s. [from cant.] A term of reproach for hypocrites, who talk formally of religion, without obeying it.

CANTERBURY BELLS, kân'tûr-bêr-rè-bêlls. See BELFLOWER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP, kân'tûr-bêr-rè-gâl-lûp. [In horsemanship.] The hand gallop of an ambling horse, commonly called a canter; said to be derived from the monks riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses.

CANTHA'RIDES, kân-*th*âr'è-dèz. n. s. [Latin.] Spanish flies, used to raise blisters.

The flies, cantharides, are bred of a worm, or caterpillar, but peculiar to certain fruit trees; as are the fig-tree, the pine-tree, and the wild brier; all which bear sweet fruit, and fruit that hath a kind of secret biting or sharpness: for the fig hath a milk in it that is sweet and corrosive; the pine apple hath a kernel that is strong and abstersive. Bacon.

CA'NTHUS, kân'*th*ûs. n. s. [Latin.] The corner of the eye. The internal is called the greater, the external the lesser canthus. Quincy.

A gentlewoman was seized with an inflammation and tumour in the great canthus, or angle of her eye. Wiseman.

CA'NTICLE, kân'tè-kl.[405] n. s. [from canto, Lat.] A song: used generally for a song in scripture.

This right of estate, in some nations, is yet more significantly expressed by Moses in his canticles, in the person of God to the Jews. Bacon's Holy War.

CANTI'LIVERS, kân-tè-lîv'ûrz. n. s. Pieces of wood framed into the front or other sides of a house, to sustain the moulding and eaves over it. Moxon.

CA'NTION, kân'shûn. n. s. [cantio, Lat.] Song; verses. Not now in use.

In the eighth eclogue the same person was brought in singing a cantion of Collin's making. Spenser.

CA'NTLE, kân'tl.[405] n. s. [kant, Dutch, a corner; eschantillon, Fr. a piece.] A piece with corners. Skinner.

See how this river comes, me crankling in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land
A huge halfmoon, a monstrous cantle out. Shaksp.

To CA'NTLE, kân'tl.[405] v. a. [from the noun. To cut in pieces.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,
That must be cantled, and the judge go snack. Dryden.

CA'NTLET, kânt'lêt.[99] n. s. [from cantle.] A piece; a fragment.

Nor shield nor armour can their force oppose;
Huge cantlets of his buckler strew the ground,
And no defence in his bor'd arms is found. Dryden.

CA'NTO, kân'tò. n. s. [Ital.] A book, or section, of a poem.

Why, what would you do?——
—Make a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house;
Write loyal cantos of contemned love. Shakspeare.

CA'NTON, kân'tûn.[166] n. s.

1. A small parcel or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small shires, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government. Davies.

2. A small community, or clan.

The same is the case of rovers by land; such, as yet, are some cantons in Arabia, and some petty kings of the mountains adjacent to straits and ways. Bacon's Holy War.

To CA'NTON, kân'tûn.[166] v. a. [from the noun.] To divide into little parts.

Families shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves. Locke.

It would certainly be for the good of mankind, to have all the mighty empires and monarchies of the world cantoned out into petty states and principalities. Addison on Italy.

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories cantoned out into parcels by other princes, during his own life, and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France. Swift.

They canton out to themselves a little province in the intellectual world, where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness. Watts.

To CA'NTONIZE, kân'tûn-ize. v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Ireland cantonized among ten persons of the English nation. Davies on Ireland.

The whole forest was in a manner cantonized amongst a very few in number, of whom some had regal rights. Howel.

CA'NTRED, kân'trîd. n. s. The same in Wales as an hundred in England. For cantre, in the British language, signifieth an hundred. Cowell.

The king regrants to him all that province, reserving only the city of Dublin, and the cantreds next adjoining, with the maritime towns. Davies.

CA'NVASS, kân'vâs. n. s. [canevas, Fr. cannabis, Lat. hemp.

1. A kind of linen cloth woven for several uses, as sails, painting cloths, tents.

The master commanded forthwith to set on all the canvass they could, and fly homeward. Sidney.

And eke the pens, that did his pinions bind,
Were like main yards with flying canvass lin'd. Spenser.

Their canvass castles up they quickly rear,
And build a city in an hour's space. Fairfax.

Where'er thy navy spreads her canvass wings,
Homage to thee, and peace to all, she brings. Waller.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight,
And spreads his flying canvass to the sound;
Him whom no danger, were he there, could fright,
Now absent, every little noise can wound. Dryden.

Thou, Kneller, long with noble pride,
The foremost of thy art, hast vied

With nature in a generous strife,
And touch'd the canvass into life. Addison.

2. The act of sifting voices, or trying them previously to the decisive act of voting. [from canvass, as it signifies a sieve.]

There be that can pack cards, and yet cannot play well: so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon.

To CA'NVASS, kân'vâs. v. a. [Skinner derives it from cannabasser, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into.]

1. To sift; to examine. [from canvass, a straining cloth.]

I have made careful search on all hands, and canvassed the matter with all possible diligence. Woodward.

2. To debate; to discuss.

The curs discovered a raw hide at the bottom of a river, and laid their heads together how to come at it: they canvassed the matter one way and t'other, and concluded, that the way to get it, was to drink their way to it. L'Estrange.

To CA'NVASS, kân'vâs. v. n. To solicit; to try votes previously to the decisive act.

Elizabeth being to resolve upon an officer, and being, by some that canvassed for others, put in some doubt of that person she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lanthorn seeking a man. Bacon.

This crime of canvassing, or soliciting for church preferment, is, by the canon law, called simony. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CA'NY, kâ'nè. adj. [from cane.]

1. Full of canes.

2. Consisting of canes.

But in his way lights on the barren plains
Of Sericana, where Chineses drive,
With sails and wind, their cany waggons light. Milton.

CA'NZONET, kân-zò-nêt'. n. s. [canzonetta, Ital.] A little song.

Vecchi was most pleasing of all others, for his conceit and variety, as well his madrigals as canzonets. Peacham.

CAP, kâp. n. s. [cap, Welsh; cæppe, Sax. cappe, Germ. cappe, Fr. cappa, Ital. capa, Span. kappe, Dan. and Dutch; caput a head, Latin.]

1. The garment that covers the head.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.—
—Why, this was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.
I have ever held my cap off to thy fortune.—
—Thou hast serv'd me with much faith. Shaksp.
First, lolling sloth in woollen cap,
Taking her after-dinner nap. Swift.
The cap, the whip, the masculine attire,
For which they roughen to the sense. Thomson.

2. The ensign of the cardinalate.

Henry the Fifth did sometimes prophesy,
If once he came to be a cardinal,
He'd make his cap coequal with the crown.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

3. The topmost; the highest.

Thou art the cap of all the fools alive. Shaksp.

4. A reverence made by uncovering the head.

They more and less came in with cap and knee,
Met him in boroughs, cities, villages. Shaksp.
Should the want of a cap or a cringe so mortally discompose him, as we find afterwards it did. L'Estrange.

5. A vessel made like a cap.

It is observed, that a barrel or cap, whose cavity will contain eight cubical feet of air, will not serve a diver above a quarter of an hour. Wilkins.

6. Cap of a great gun. A piece of lead laid over the touch-hole, to preserve the prime.

7. Cap of maintenance. One of the regalia carried before the king at the coronation.

To CAP, kâp. v. a. [from the noun.]

The bones next the joint are capped with a smooth cartilaginous substance, serving both to strength and motion. Derham.

2. To deprive of the cap.

If one, by another occasion, take any thing from another, as boys sometimes use to cap one another the same is straight felony. Spenser on Ireland.

3. To cap verses. To name alternately verses beginning with a particular letter; to name in opposition or emulation; to name alternately in contest.

Where Henderson, and th' other masses,
Were sent to cap texts, and put cases. Hudibras.
Sure it is a pitiful pretence to ingenuity that can be thus kept up, there being little need of any other faculty but memory, to be able to cap texts. Government of the Tongue.

There is an author of ours, whom I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping characters. Atterbury.

CAP à pié, CAP à pié, kâp-â-pê'. [cap à pié, Fr.] From head to foot; all over.

A figure like your father,
Arm'd at all points exactly, cap à pè,
Appears before them, and, with solemn march,
Goes slow and stately by them. Shaksp. Hamlet.
There for the two contending knights he sent;
Arm'd cap à pié, with rev'rence low they bent. Dryden.

A woodlouse,
That folds up itself in itself for a house,
As round as a ball, without head, without tail,
Inclos'd cap à pè in a strong coat of mail. Swift

CAP-PAPER, kâp'pâ-pûr. A sort of coarse brownish paper. So called from being formed into a kind of cap to hold commodities.

Having, for trial-sake, filtered it through cap-paper, there remained in the filtre a powder. Boyle.

CAPABI'LITY, kâ-pâ-bîl'ê-tê. n. s. [from capable.] Capacity; the quality of being capable.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To rust in us unus'd. Shakspeare.

CA'PABLE, kâ'pâ-bl. adj. [capable, Fr.]

1. Sufficient to contain; sufficiently capacious.

When we consider so much of that space, as is equal to, or capable to receive a body of any assigned dimensions. Locke.

2. Endued with powers equal to any particular thing.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon.

When you hear any person give his judgment, consider with yourself whether he be a capable judge. Watts.

3. Intelligent; able to understand.

Look you, how pale he glares;
His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Shaksp. Hamlet.

4. Intellectually capacious; able to receive.

I am much bound to God, that he hath endued you with one capable of the best instructions. Digby.

5. Susceptible.

The soul, immortal substance, to remain
Conscious of joy, and capable of pain. Prior.

6. Qualified for; without any natural impediment.

There is no man that believes the goodness of God, but must be inclined to think, that he hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Tillotson.

7. Qualified for; without legal impediment.

Of my land,
Loyal and natural boy! I'll work the means
To make thee capable. Shaksp. King Lear.

8. It has the particle of before a noun.

What secret springs their eager passions move,
How capable of death for injur'd love! Dryden.

9. Hollow. This sense is not now in use.

Lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice, and capable impressure,
Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakspeare.

CA'PABLENESS, kâ'pâ-bl-nês. n. s. [from capable.] The quality or state of being capable; knowledge; understanding; power of mind.

CAPA'CIOUS, kâ-pâ'shûs. adj. [capax, Lat.]

1. Wide; large; able to hold much.

Beneath th' incessant weeping of those drains
I see the rocky siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk
Or stiff compacted clay, capacious found. Thomson.

2. Extensive; equal to much knowledge, or great design.

There are some persons of a good genius, and a capacious mind, who write and speak very obscurely. Watts.

CAPA'CIOUSNESS, kâ-pâ'shûs-nês. n. s. [from capacious.] The power of holding or receiving; largeness.

A concave measure, of known and denominate capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. In like manner to a given weight the weight of all other bodies may be reduced and so found out. Holder on Time.

To CAPA'CITATE, kâ-pâs'ê-tâte. v. a. [from capacity.] To make capable; to enable; to qualify.

By this instruction we may be capacitated to observe those errours. Dryden.

These sort of men were sycophants only, and were endued with arts of life, to capacitate them for the conversation of the rich and great. Tatler.

CAPA'CITY, kâ-pâs'ê-tê.[511] n. s. [capacité, Fr.]

1. The power of holding or containing any thing.

Had our palace the capacity
To camp this host, we would all sup together. Shakspeare.

Notwithstanding thy capacity
Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,
Of what validity and pitch soe'er,
But falls into abatement and low price. Shaksp.
For they that most and greatest things embrace,
Enlarge thereby their mind's capacity,
As streams enlarg'd, enlarge the channel's space. Davies.

Space, considered in length, breadth, and thickness, I think, may be called capacity. Locke.

2. Room; space.

There remained, in the capacity of the exhausted cylinder, store of little rooms, or spaces, empty or devoid of air. Boyle.

3. The force or power of the mind.

No intellectual creature is able, by capacity, to do that which nature doth without capacity and knowledge. Hooker.

In spiritual natures, so much as there is of desire, so much there is also of capacity to receive. I do not say, there is always a capacity to receive the very thing they desire, for that may be impossible. South.

An heroic poem requires the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking; which requires the duty of a soldier, and the capacity and prudence of a general. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

4. Power; ability.

Since the world's wide frame does not include
A cause with such capacities endued,
Some other cause o'er nature must preside. Blackm.

5. State; condition; character.

A miraculous revolution, reducing many from the head of a triumphant rebellion to their old condition of masons, smiths, and carpenters; that, in this capacity, they might repair what, as colonels and captains, they had ruined and defaced. South.

You desire my thoughts as a friend, and not as a member of parliament; they are the same in both capacities. Swift.

CAPA'RISON, kå-pâr'ê-sůn.[170 443] n. s. [caparazon, a great cloke, Span.] A horse-cloth, or a sort of cover for a horse, which is spread over his furniture. Farrier's Dict.

Tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields,
Impresses quaint, caparisons, and steeds,
Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights,
At joust and tournament. Paradise Lost.

Some wore a breastplate, and a light juppon;
Their horses cloath'd with rich caparison. Dryden.

To CAPA'RISON, kå-pâr'ê-sůn. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in caparisons.

The steeds caparison'd with purple stand,
With golden trappings, glorious to behold,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold.
Dryden.

2. To dress pompously: in a ludicrous sense.

Don't you think, though I am caparisoned like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition. Shaksp. As you like it.

CAPE, kåpe. n. s. [cape, Fr.]

1. Headland; promontory.

What from the cape can you discern at sea?—
—Nothing at all; it is a high wrought flood. Shak.

The parting sun,
Beyond the earth's green cape and verdant isles,
Hesperean sets; my signal to depart. Par. Lost.

The Romans made war upon the Tarentines, and obliged them by treaty not to sail beyond the cape. Arbuthnot.

2. The neck-piece of a cloke.

He was cloathed in a robe of fine black cloth, with wide sleeves and cape. Bacon.

CA'PER, kå'půr.[98] n. s. [from caper, Lat. a goat.] A leap; a jump; a skip.

We, that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly. Shakspeare. As you like it.

Flimnap, the treasurer, is allowed to cut a caper, on the strait rope, at least an inch higher than any other lord in the whole empire. Swift's Gul. Trav.

CA'PER, kå'půr. n. s. [capparis, Lat.] An acid pickle. See CAPER-BUSH.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as mangoes, olives, and capers. Floyer on the Humours.

To CA'PER, kå'půr. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance frolicksomely.

The truth is, I am only old in judgment; and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

2. To skip for merriment.

Our master
Cap'ring to eye her. Shakesp. Tempest.

His nimble hand's instinct then taught each string
A cap'ring cheerfulness, and made them sing
To their own dance. Crashaw.

The family tript it about, and capered like hail-stones bounding from a marble floor. Arbuthnot.

3. To dance: spoken in contempt.

The stage would need no force, nor song, nor dance,
Nor capering monsieur from active France. Rowe.

CA'PERER, kå'půr-růr.[555] n. s. [from caper.] A dancer: in contempt.

The tumbler's gambols some delight afford;
No less the nimble caperer on the cord:
But these are still insipid stuff to thee,
Coop'd in a ship, and toss'd upon the sea. Dryden.

CA'PERBUSH, kå'půr-bůsh. n. s. [capparis, Lat.]

The fruit is fleshy, and shaped like a pear. This plant grows in the South of France, in Spain, and in Italy, upon old walls and buildings; and the buds of the flowers, before they are open are pickled for eating. Miller.

CA'PIAS, kå'pê-ůs.[88] n. s. [Lat.] A writ of two sorts: One before judgment, called capias ad respondendum, in an action personal, if the sheriff, upon the first writ of distress, return that he has no effects in his jurisdiction. The other is a writ of execution after judgment. Cowell.

CAPI'LLAMENT, kå-pîl'lå-mênt. n. s. [capillamentum, Lat.] Those small threads or hairs which grow up in the middle of a flower, and adorned with little knobs at the top, are called capillaments. Quincy.

CA'PILLARY, kåp-pîl'lå-rê. adj. [from capillus, hair, Lat.]

1. Resembling hairs; small; minute: applied to plants.

Capillary or capillaceous plants, are such as have no main stalk or stem, but grow to the ground, as hairs on the head; and which bear their seeds in little tufts or protuberances on the backside of their leaves. Quincy.

Our common hyssop is not the least of vegetables, nor observed to grow upon walls; but rather, some kind of capillaries, which are very small plants, and only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Applied to vessels of the body: small; as the ramifications of the arteries. Quincy.

Ten capillary arteries in some parts of the body, as in the brain, are not equal to one hair; and the smallest lymphatick vessels are an hundred times smaller than the smallest capillary artery. Arbuth.

CAPILLA'TION, kåp-pîl-lå'shůn. n. s. [from capillus, Lat.] A vessel like a hair; a small ramification of vessels. Not used.

Nor is the humour contained in smaller veins, or obscurer capillations, but in a vesicle. Brown.

CA'PITAL, kåp'ê-tâl.[88] adj. [capitalis, Lat.]

1. Relating to the head.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise
Expect with mortal pain. Paradise Lost.

Edmund, I arrest thee
On capital treason. Shaksp. King Lear.

Several cases deserve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us. Swift.

3. That which affects life.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occurrent both in the life and conditions of private men. Spenser on Ireland.

As to swerve in the least points, is errour, so the capital enemies thereof God hateth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition. Hooker.

They do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital article in religion. Atterbury

5. Chief; metropolitan.

This had been
Perhaps thy capital seat, from whence had spread
All generations; and had hither come,
From all the ends of th' earth, to celebrate
And reverence thee, their great progenitor.
Paradise Lost.

6. Applied to letters; large; such as are written at the beginnings or heads of books.

Our most considerable actions are always present, like capital letters to an aged and dim eye. Taylor's Holy Living.

The first is written in capital letters, without chapters or verses. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

7. Capital stock. The principal or original stock of a trader or company.

CA'PITAL, kåp'ê-tâl. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The upper part of a pillar.

You see the volute of the Ionick, the foliage of the Corinthian, and the ouvali of the Dorick, mixed without any regularity on the same capital. Addison on Italy.

2. The chief city of a nation or kingdom.

To CAPI'TULATE, kå-pîtsh'ů-late.[91] v. n. [from capitulum, Lat.]

1. To draw up any thing in heads or articles.

Percy, Northumberland,
The archbishop of York, Douglas, and Mortimer,
Capitulate against us, and are up.
Shaksp. Henry IV.

2. To yield, or surrender up, on certain stipulations.

The king took it for a great indignity, that thieves should offer to capitulate with him as enemies. Hayward.

I still pursued, and about two o'clock this afternoon she thought fit to capitulate. Spectator.

CAPITULA'TION, kă-pitsh-ŭ-lā'shŭn. n. s. [from capitulate.] Stipulation; terms; conditions.

It was not a complete conquest, but rather a dedition upon terms and capitulations, agreed between the conquerour and the conquered; wherein, usually, the yielding party secured to themselves their law and religion. Hale.

CAPI'VI-TREE, kă-pē'vē-trēē. n. s. [copaiba, Lat.]

This tree grows near a village called Ayapel, in the province of Antiochi, in the Spanish West Indies, about ten days journey from Carthagena. Some of them do not yield any of the balsam; those that do, are distinguished by a ridge which runs along their trunks. These trees are wounded in their centre, and they apply vessels to the wounded part to receive the balsam. One of these trees will yield five or six gallons of balsam. Miller.

To CAPO'CH, kă-pŏŏtsh'. v. a. I know not distinctly what this word means; perhaps, to strip off the hood.

Capoch'd your rabins of the Synod,
And snapt the canons with a why not. Hudibras.

CA'PON, kā'pn.[405] [170] n. s. [capo, Lat.] A castrated cock.

In good roast beef my landlord sticks his knife;
The capon fat delights his dainty wife. Gay's Past.

18. To exhibit to show; to display on the outside; to set to view.

The aspect of every one in the family carries so much satisfaction, that it appears he knows his happy lot. Addison.

19. To imply; to import.

It carries too great an imputation of ignorance, lightness, or folly, for men to quit and renounce their former tenets, presently, upon the offer of an argument which they cannot immediately answer. Locke.

20. To contain; to comprise.

He thought it carried something of argument in it, to prove that doctrine. Watts on the Mind.

21. To have annexed; to have any thing joined: with the particle with.

There was a righteous and a searching law, directly forbidding such practices; and they knew that it carried with it the divine stamp. South.

There are many expressions, which carry with them to my mind no clear ideas. Locke.

The obvious portions of extension, that affect our senses, carry with them into the mind the idea of finite. Locke.

22. To convey or bear any thing united or adhering, by communication of motion.

We see also manifestly, that sounds are carried with wind: and therefore sounds will be heard further with the wind than against the wind. Bacon.

23. To move or continue any thing in a certain direction.

His chimney is carried up through the whole rock, so that you see the sky through it, notwithstanding the rooms lie very deep. Addison on Italy.

24. To push on ideas, arguments, or any thing successive in a train.

Manethes, that wrote of the Egyptians, hath carried up their government to an incredible distance. Hale's Origin of Mankind

25. To receive; to endure; not in use.

Some have in readiness so many odd stories, as there is nothing but they can wrap it into a tale, to make others carry it with more pleasure. Bacon.

26. To convey by means of something supporting

Carry camomile, or wild thyme, or the green strawberry, upon sticks, as you do hops upon poles. Bacon's Natural History.

27. To bear, as trees.

Set them a reasonable depth, and they will carry more shoots upon the stem. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

28. To fetch and bring, as dogs.

Young whelps learn easily to carry; young popinjays learn quickly to speak. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

29. To carry off. To kill.

Was packing all his goods in one poor cart,
He stopp'd a little—— Dryden's Juvenal.

3. A small carriage with two wheels, used by husbandmen; distinguished from a wagon, which has four wheels.

Alas! what weights are these that load my heart!
I am as dull as winter starved sheep,
Tir'd as a jade in overloaden cart. Sidney.

4. The vehicle in which criminals are carried to execution.

The squire, whose good grace was to open the scene,
Now fitted the halter, now travers'd the cart,
And often took leave, but was loth to depart. Prior.

To CART, kârt. v. a. [from the noun.] To expose in a cart, by way of punishment.

Democritus ne'er laugh'd so loud,
To see bawds carted through the crowd. Hudibras.

No woman led a better life:
She to intrigues was e'en hard-hearted;
She chuckled when a bawd was carted;
And thought the nation ne'er would thrive,
Till all the whores were burnt alive. Prior.

To CART, kârt. v. n. To use carts for carriage.

Oxen are not so good for draught, where you have occasion to cart much, but for winter ploughing. Mortimer.

CART-HORSE, kârt'hôrse. n. s. [from cart and horse.] A coarse unwieldy horse, fit only for the cart.

My mistress for the strangers carv'd. Prior.

CA'RVEL, kär'vêl. n. s. A small ship.

I gave them order, if they found any Indians there, to send in the little fly-boat, or the carvel, into the river; for, with our great ships, we durst not approach the coast. Raleigh.

CA'RVER, kär'vûr.[98] n. s. [from carve.]

1. A sculptor.

All arts and artists Theseus could command,
Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame;
The master painters and the carvers came. Dryden.

2. He that cuts up the meat at the table.

Meanwhile thy indignation yet to raise,
The carver, dancing round each dish, surveys
With flying knife, and, as his art directs,
With proper gestures ev'ry fowl dissects. Dryden.

3. He that apportions or distributes at will.

In this kind, to come in braving arms,
Be his own carver, and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrongs it may not be.
Shakspeare's Richard II.

We are not the carvers of our own fortunes.
L'Estrange.

CA'RVING, kär'vîng.[410] n. s. [from carve.] Sculpture; figures carved.

Quoth Ralph, I should not, if I were
In case for action, now be here. Hudibras.

For if the sire be faint, or out of case,
He will be copy'd in his famish'd race. Dryden.

The priest was pretty well in case,
And shew'd some humour in his face;
Look'd with an easy careless mien,
A perfect stranger to the spleen. Swift.

7. Contingence; possible event.

The atheist, in case things should fall out contrary to his belief or expectation, hath made no provision for this case; if, contrary to his confidence, it should prove in the issue that there is a God, the man is lost and undone for ever. Tillotson.

8. Question relating to particular persons or things.

Well do I find each man most wise in his own case. Sidney.

It is strange, that the ancient fathers should not appeal to this judge, in all cases, it being so short and expedite a way for the ending of controversies. Tillotson.

9. Representation of any fact or question.

10. The variation of nouns.

The several changes which the noun undergoes in the Latin and Greek tongues, in the several numbers, are called cases, and are designed to express the several views or relations under which the mind considers things with regard to one another; and the variation of the noun for this purpose is called declension. Clark's Latin Grammar.

11. In case. [in caso, Ital.] If it should happen; upon the supposition that: a form of speech now little used.

For in case it be certain, hard it cannot be for them to shew us where we shall find it; that we may say these were the orders of the apostles. Hooker.

A sure retreat to his forces, in case they should have an ill day, or unlucky chance in the field. Bacon.

This would be the accomplishment of their common felicity, in case, either by their evil destiny or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost. Hayward.

To CASE, kāse. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in a case or cover.

Case ye, case ye; on with your vizours; there's money of the king's coming down the hill. Shaksp.

The cry went once for thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again,
If thou would'st not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in a tent. Shakspeare.

Like a fall'n cedar, far diffus'd his train,
Cas'd in green scales, the crocodile extends. Thoms.

1. To discard; to dismiss from a post, or a society, with reproach.

Does 't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that small hurt hast cashier'd Cassio. Shakspeare.

Seconds in factions many times prove principals; but many times also they prove cyphers, and are cashiered. Bacon.

If I had omitted what he said, his thoughts and words being thus cashiered in my hands, he had no longer been Lucretius. Dryden.

They have already cashiered several of their followers as mutineers. Addison's Freeholder.

The ruling rogue, who dreads to be cashier'd,
Contrives, as he is hated, to be feared. Swift.

2. It seems, in the following passages, to signify the same as to annul: to vacate: which is sufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we should find a father corrupting his son, or a mother her daughter, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which seems to be utter cashiering of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity. South.

Some cashier, or at least endeavour to invalidate all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious. Locke.

CASK, kăsk. n. s. [casque, Fr. cadus, Lat.]

1. A barrel; a wooden vessel to stop up liquor or provisions.

The patient turning himself abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noise, like the rumbling of water in a cask. Harvey.

Perhaps to-morrow he may change his wine,
And drink old sparkling Alban, or Setine,
Whose title, and whose age, with mould o'ergrown,
The good old cask for ever keeps unknown. Dryden.

2. It has cask in a kind of plural sense, to signify the commodity or provision of casks.

Great inconveniences grow by the bad cask being commonly so ill seasoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever lost and cast away. Raleigh.

CASK, CASQUE, kăsk. [415] n. s. [casque, Fr. cassis, Latin.] A helmet; armour for the head: a poetical word.

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy pernicious enemy. Shakspeare.

And these
Sling weighty stones, when from afar they fight;
Their casques are cork, a covering thick and light. Dryden.

Why does he load with darts
His trembling hands, and crush beneath a cask
His wrinkled brows? Addison.

Neither given any leave to search in particular who are the heirs of the kingdom of God, who castaways. Hooker

Lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway. 1 Cor.

CA'STAWAY, kâst'â-wâ. adj. [from the noun.] Useless; of no value.

We only prize, pamper, and exalt this vassal and slave of death; or only remember, at our castaway leisure, the imprisoned immortal soul.
Raleigh's History.

CA'STED, kâst'êd. The participle preterit of cast, but improperly, and found perhaps only in the following passage.

When the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,
The organs, tho' defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity. Shaksp.

CA'STELLAIN, kâs-têl'lîn. n. s. [castellano, Span.] The captain, governour, or constable of a castle.

CA'STELLANY, kâs'têl-lâ-nè. n. s. [from castel.] The lordship belonging to a castle; the extent of its land and jurisdiction. Phillips.

CA'STELLATED, kâs-têl'lâ-têd. adj. [from castle.] Inclosed within a building, as a fountain or cistern castellated. Dict.

CA'STER, kâs'tûr. n. s. [from To cast.]

1. A thrower; he that casts.

If with this throw the strongest caster vie,
Still, further still, I bid the discus fly. Pope.

2. A calculator; a man that calculates fortunes.

Did any of them set up for a caster of fortunate figures, what might he not get by his predictions?
Addison.

To CA'STIGATE, kâs'tè-gâte[91] v. a. [castigo, Lat.] To chastise; to chasten; to correct; to punish.

If thou didst put this sour cold habit on,
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well. Shakspeare

CASTIGA'TION, kâs-tè-gâ'shûn. n. s. [from To castigate.]

1. Penance; discipline.

This hand of yours requires
A sequester from liberty; fasting and prayer,
With castigation, exercise devout. Shakspeare.

2. Punishment; correction.

Their castigations were accompanied with encouragements; which care was taken to keep me from looking upon as mere compliments. Boyle.

3. Emendation; repressive remedy.

The ancients had these conjectures touching these floods and conflagrations, so as to frame them into an hypothesis for the castigation of the excesses of generation. Hale.

CAS'TIGATORY, kâs'tè-gâ-tûr-è.[512] adj. [from castigate.] Punitive, in order to amendment.

There were other ends of penalties inflicted, either probatory, castigatory, or exemplary.
Bramhall against Hobbes.

CA'STING-NET, kâs'ting-nêt. n. s. [from casting and net.] A net to be thrown into the water, not placed and left.

Casting-nets did rivers bottoms sweep.
May's Virgil.

1. A strong house, fortified against assaults.

The castle of Macduff I will surprise. Shaksp.

2. CA'STLES in the air, kâs'sls-în-THÊ-âre. [chateaux d'Espagne, Fr.] Projects without reality.

These were but like castles in the air, and in men's fancies vainly imagined.
Raleigh's History of the World.

CA'STLE-SOAP, kâs'sl-sòpe n. s. [I suppose corrupted from Castile soap.] A kind of soap.

I have a letter from a soap-boiler, desiring me to write upon the present duties on Castle-soap. Addison.

CA'STLED, kâs'sld.[405 472] adj. [from castle.] Furnished with castles.

The horses neighing by the wind is blown,
And castled elephants o'erlook the town. Dryden.

CA'STLEWARD, kâs'sl-wârd. n. s. [from castle and ward.] An imposition laid upon such of the king's subjects, as dwell within a certain compass of any castle, toward the maintenance of such as watch and ward the castle. Cowell.

CA'STLING, kâst'ling. n. s. [from cast.] An abortive.

We should rather rely upon the urine of a castling's bladder, a resolution of crabs eyes, or a second distillation of urine, as Helmont hath commended. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CA'STOR, or CHESTER, kâs'tûr, are derived from the Sax. ceaꝛtep, a city, town, or castle; and that from the Latin castrum: the Saxons chusing to fix in such places of strength and figure, as the Romans had before built or fortified Gibson's Camden.

CA'STOR, kâs'tûr. n. s.[98] [castor, Lat.]

1. A beaver. See BEAVER.

Like hunted castors conscious of their store,
Their waylaid wealth to Norway's coast they bring. Dryden.

2. A fine hat made of the fur of a beaver.

CA'STOR and POLLUX, kâs'tûr-ând-pôl-lûkz. [In meteorology.] A fiery meteor, which appears sometimes sticking to a part of the ship, in form of one, two, or even three or four balls. When one is seen alone, it is called Helena, which portend the severest part of the storm to be yet behind; two are denominated Castor and Pollux, and sometimes Tyndarides, which portends a cessation of the storm. Chambers.

CASTO'REUM, kâs-tô'rè-ûm. n. s. [from castor. In pharmacy.] A liquid matter inclosed in bags or purses, near the anus of the castor, falsely taken for his testicles. Chambers.

2. To take away the obscene parts of a writing.

CASTRA'TION, kâs-trâ'shûn. n. s. [from castrate.] The act of gelding.

The largest needle should be used, in taking up the spermatick vessels in castration. Sharp's Surg.

CA'STERIL, CA'STREL, kâs'trîl.[99] n. s. A kind of hawk.

CASTRE'NSIAN, kâs-trên'shè-ân. adj. [castrensis, Lat.] Belonging to a camp. Dict.

CA'SUAL, kâzh'ù-âl.[451 453] adj. [casuel, Fr. from casus, Lat.] Accidental; arising from chance; depending upon chance; not certain.

The revenue of Ireland, both certain and casual, did not rise unto ten thousand pounds. Davies on Ireland.

That which seemeth most casual and subject to fortune, is yet disposed by the ordinance of God. Raleigh's History.

Whether found where casual fire
Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale,
Down to the veins of earth. Milton.

The commissioners entertained themselves by the fire-side in general and casual discourses. Clarendon.

Most of our rarities have been found out by casual emergency, and have been the works of time and chance, rather than of philosophy. Glanville.

The expences of some of them always exceed their certain annual income; but seldom their casual supplies. I call them casual in compliance with the common form. Atterbury.

CA'SUALLY, kâzh'ù-âl-lè. adv. [from casual.] Accidentally; without design or set purpose.

Go, bid my woman
Search for a jewel, that too casually
Hath left mine arm. Shakspeare.

Wool new shorn, laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, had drunk up the verjuice, though the vessel was without any flaw. Bacon

I should have acquainted my judge with one advantage, and which I now casually remember. Dryden.

CA'SUALNESS, kâzh'ù-âl-nês. n. s. [from casual.] Accidentalness.

CA'SUALTY, kâzh'ù-âl-tè. n. s. [from casual.]

1. Accident; a thing happening by chance, not design.

With more patience men endure the losses that befal them by mere casualty, than the damages which they sustain by injustice. Raleigh's Essays.

That Octavius Cæsar should shift his camp that night that it happened to be took by the enemy, was a mere casualty; yet it preserved a person, who lived to establish a total alteration of government in the imperial city of the world. South.

2. Chance that produces unnatural death.

Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Ev'n in the force and road of casualty. Shaksp.

It is observed in particular nations, that, within the space of two or three hundred years, notwithstanding all casualties, the number of men doubles. Burnet's Theory.

We find one casualty in our bills, of which, though there be daily talk, there is little effect. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

CA'SUIST, kâzh'ù-îst. n. s. [casuiste Fr. from casus, Lat.] One that studies, and settles cases of conscience.

The judgment of any casuist or learned divine, concerning the state of a man's soul, is not sufficient to give him confidence. South.

You can scarce see a bench of porters without two or three casuists in it, that will settle you the rights of princes. Addison.

Who shall decide when doctors disagree,
And soundest casuists doubt, like you and me? Pope.

CASUI'STICAL, kâzh-ù-îs'tè-kâl. adj. [from casuist.] Relating to cases of conscience; containing the doctrine relating to cases.

What arguments they have to beguile poor, simple, unstable souls with, I know not; but surely the practical, casuistical, that is, the principal, vital part of their religion savours very little of spirituality. South.

CA'SUISTRY, kâzh'ù-îs-trè. n. s. [from casuist.] The science of a casuist; the doctrine of cases of conscience.

This concession would not pass for good casuistry in these ages. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

Morality, by her false guardians drawn,
Chicane in furs, and casuistry in lawn. Pope's Dunciad.

CAT, kât. n. s. [katz, Teuton. chat, Fr.] A domestic animal that catches mice, commonly reckoned by naturalists the lowest order of the leonine species.

'Twas you incensed the rabble:
Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd. Shaksp. Macbeth.

A cat, as she beholds the light, draws the ball of her eye small and long, being covered over with a green skin, and dilates it at pleasure. Peacham on Drawing.

CAT, kât. n. s. A sort of ship.

CAT in the pan, kât'în-thè-pân. [Imagined by some to be rightly written Catipan, coming from Catipania. An unknown correspondent imagines, very naturally, that it is corrupted from Cate in the pan.]

There is a cunning which we, in England, call the turning of the cat in the pan; which is, when that which a man says to another, he lays it as if another had said it to him. Bacon.

CAT o' nine tails, kât-â-nîne'tâlz.[88] A whip with nine lashes, used for the punishment of crimes.

You dread reformers of an impious age,
You awful cat o' nine tails to the stage,
This once be just, and in our cause engage.
Prologue to Vanbrugh's False Friend.

CATACHRE'SIS, kât-â-krè'sîs.[520] n. s. [κατάχρησις, abuse.] It is, in rhetorick, the abuse of a trope, when the words are too far wrested from their native signification; or when one word is abusively put for another, for want of the proper word; as, a voice beautiful to the ear. Smith's Rhetorick.

CATACHRE'STICAL, kât-â-krês'tè-kâl. adj. [from catachresis.] Contrary to proper use; forced; far fetched.

A catachrestical and far derived similitude it holds with men, that is, in a bifurcation. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CA'TACLYSM, kât-â-klîzm. n. s. [κατακλύσμος.] A deluge; an inundation: used generally for the universal deluge.

The opinion that held these cataclysms and empyroses universal, was such as held that it put a total consummation unto things in this lower world. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CA'TACOMBS, kât'â-kômz. n. s. [from κατὰ, and κομβος, a hollow or cavity.] Subterraneous cavities for the burial of the dead; of which there are a great number about three miles from Rome, supposed to be the caves and cells where the primitive Christians hid and assembled themselves, and where they interred the martyrs, which are accordingly visited with devotion. But anciently, the word catacomb was only understood of the tombs of St. Peter and St. Paul. Chambers.

On the side of Naples are the catacombs, which must have been full of stench, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open nitches. Addison.

CATAGMA'TICK, kât-âg-mât'tîk. adj. [κατα-γμα, a fracture.] That which has the quality of consolidating the parts.

I put on a catagmatick emplaster, and, by the use of a laced glove, scattered the pituitous swelling, and strengthened it. Wiseman's Surgery.

CATALE'PSIS, kåt-å-lêp'sîs. n. s. [κατάληψις.] A lighter species of the apoplexy, or epilepsy.

There is a disease called a catalepsis, wherein the patient is suddenly seized without sense or motion, and remains in the same posture in which the disease seizeth him. Arbuthnot.

CA'TALOGUE, kåt'å-lôg.[338] n. s. [καταλογος.] An enumeration of particulars; a list; a register of things one by one.

In the catalogue ye go for men,
Showghes, water rugs, and demy wolves, are cleped
All by the name of dogs. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Make a catalogue of prosperous sacrilegious persons, and I believe they will be repeated sooner than the alphabet. South.

In the library of manuscripts belonging to St. Laurence, of which there is a printed catalogue, I looked into the Virgil, which disputes its antiquity with that of the Vatican. Addison.

The bright Taygete, and the shining Bears,
With all the sailors catalogue of stars. Addison.

CATAMO'UNTAIN, kåt-å-môůn'tîn. n. s. [from cat and mountain.] A fierce animal, resembling a cat.

The black prince of Monomotapa, by whose side were seen the glaring catamountain, and the quill-darting porcupine. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CA'TAPHRACT, kåt'å-frâkt. n. s. [cataphracta, Lat.] A horse-man in complete armour.

On each side went armed guards,
Both horse and foot; before him and behind,
Archers and slingers, cataphracts and spears. Milton.

CA'TAPLASM, kåt'å-plâzm. n. s. [κατάπλασμα.] A poultice; a soft and moist application.

I bought an unction of a mountebank,
So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,
Where it draws blood, no cataplasm so rare,
Collected from all simples that have virtue
Under the moon, can save. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Warm cataplasms discuss, but scalding hot may confirm the tumour. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CA'TAPULT, kåt'å-půlt.[489] n. s. [catapulta, Lat.] An engine used anciently to throw stones.

The balista violently shot great stones and quarries, as also the catapults. Camden's Remains.

CA'TARACT, kåt'å-råkt. n. s. [καταρακτη.] A fall of water from on high; a shoot of water; a cascade.

Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, blow!
You cataracts and hurricanes, spout
Till you have drench'd our steeples. Shaksp.

What if all
Her stores were open'd, and the firmament
Of hell should spout her cataracts of fire?
Impendent horrours! Milton's Paradise Lost.

No sooner he, with them of man and beast
Select for life, shall in the ark be lodg'd,
And shelter'd round; but all the cataracts
Of heav'n set open, on the earth shall pour
Rain, day and night. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Torrents and loud impetuous cataracts
Through roads abrupt, and rude unfashion'd tracts,
Run down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides.
Blackmore.

CA'TARACT, kåt'å-råkt. [In medicine.] A suffusion of the eye, when little clouds, motes, and flies seem to float about in the air; when confirmed, the pupil of the eye is either wholly, or in part, covered, and shut up with a little thin skin, so that the light has no admittance. Quincy.

Saladine hath a yellow milk, which hath likewise much acrimony; for it cleanseth the eyes: it is good also for cataracts. Bacon's Natural History.

CATA'RRH, kå-târ'. n. s. [καταρρέω, defluo.] A defluxion of a sharp serum from the glands about the head and throat, generally occasioned by a diminution of insensible perspiration, or cold, wherein what should pass by the skin, oozes out upon those glands, and occasions irritations. The causes are, whatsoever occasions too great a quantity of serum; whatsoever hinders the discharge by urine, and the pores of the skin. Quincy.

All fev'rous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Parad. Lost.

Neither was the body then subject to die by piecemeal, and languish under coughs, catarrhs, or consumptions. South.

CATA'RRHAL, kå-târ'rål. } adj. [from
CATA'RRHOUS, kå-târ'růs, } catarrh.] Relating to a catarrh; proceeding from a catarrh.

The catarrhal fever requires evacuations. Floyer.

Old age attended with a glutinous, cold, catarrhous, leucophlegmatick constitution. Arbuthnot.

CATA'STROPHE, kå-tås'trô-fê. n. s. [καταστροφη.]

1. The change, or revolution, which produces the conclusion or final event of a dramatic piece.

Pat!—He comes like the catastrophe of the old comedy. Shakspeare.

That philosopher declares for tragedies, whose catastrophes are unhappy, with relation to the principal characters. Dennis.

2. A final event; a conclusion, generally unhappy.

Here was a mighty revolution, the most horrible and portentous catastrophe that nature ever yet saw; an elegant and habitable earth quite shattered. Woodward's Natural History.

CA'TCAL, kåt'kåll.[406] n. s. [from cat and call.] A squeaking instrument, used in the playhouse to condemn plays.

A young lady, at the theatre, conceived a passion for a notorious rake that headed a party of catcals. Spectator.

Three catcals be the bribe
Of him, whose chatt'ring shames the monkey tribe.
Pope.

To CATCH, kåtsh.[89] v. a. preter. I catched or caught: I have catched or caught [ketsen, Dutch.]

1. To lay hold on with the hand: intimating the suddenness of the action.

And when he rose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him.
1 Sam. xvii. 35.

2. To stop any thing flying; to receive any thing in the passage.

Others, to catch the breeze of breathing air,
To Tusculum or Algido repair. Addison on Italy.

3. To seize any thing by pursuit.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly, and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; and caught it again. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

4. To stop any thing falling; to intercept falling.

A shepherd diverted himself with tossing up eggs, and catching them again. Spectator.

5. To ensnare; to entangle in a snare; to take or hold in a trap.

And they sent unto him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words.
Mark, xii. 13.

These artificial methods of reasoning are more adapted to catch and entangle the mind, than to instruct and inform the understanding. Locke.

6. To receive suddenly.

The curling smoke mounts heavy from the fires,
At length it catches flame, and in a blaze expires.
Dryden.

But stopp'd for fear, thus violently driv'n,
The sparks should catch his axletree of heav'n.
Dryden.

7. To fasten suddenly upon; to seize.

The mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his head caught hold of the oak.
2 Sam. xviii. 19.

Would they, like Benhadad's ambassadours, catch hold of every amicable expression? Decay of Piety.

8. To seize unexpectedly.

To catch something out of his mouth, that they might accuse him. Luke xi. 54.

9. To seize eagerly.

They have caught up every thing greedily, with that busy minute curiosity, and unsatisfactory inquisitiveness, which Seneca calls the disease of the Greeks. Pope.

I've perus'd her well;
Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king.
Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

10. To please; to seize the affections; to charm.

For I am young, a novice in the trade,
The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade,
And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
But, caught myself, lie struggling in the snare.
Dryden.

11. To receive any contagion or disease.

I cannot name the disease, and it is caught
Of you that yet are well. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Those measles,
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
The very way to catch them. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

In sooth I know not why I am so sad:
It wearies me; you say it wearies you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,
I am to learn. Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

The softest of our British ladies expose their necks and arms to the open air; which the men could not do without catching cold, for want of being accustomed to it. Addison's Guardian.

Or call the winds thro' long arcades to roar,
Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door. Pope.

12. To catch at. To endeavour suddenly to lay hold on.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets, and scald rhimers
Ballad us out of tune. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.

Make them catch at all opportunities of subverting the state. Addison's State of the War.

To CATCH, kåtsh. v. n.

1. To be contagious; to spread infection, or mischief.

'Tis time to give them physick, their diseases
Are grown so catching. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Sickness is catching; oh, were favour so!
Yours would I catch, fair Hermia, ere I go. Shak.

Considering it with all its malignity and catching nature, it may be enumerated with the worst of epidemicks. Harvey.

The palace of Deiphobus ascends
In smoky flames, and catches on his friends. Dryd.

Does the sedition catch from man to man,
And run among the ranks? Addison's Cato.

2. To lay hold suddenly: as, the hook catches.

When the yellow hair in flame should fall,
The catching fire might burn the golden cawl.
Dryden.

CATCH, kåtsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Seizure; the act of seizing any thing that flies or hides.

Taught by his open eye,

His eye, that ev'n did mark her trodden grass,
That she would fain the catch of Strephon fly.
Sidney.

2. Watch; the posture of seizing.

Both of them lay upon the catch for a great action; it is no wonder, therefore, that they were often engaged on one subject. Addison.

3. An advantage taken; hold laid on, as in haste.

All which notions are but ignorant catches of a few things, which are most obvious to men's observations. Bacon.

The motion is but a catch of the wit upon a few instances; as the manner is in the philosophy received. Bacon.

Fate of empires, and the fall of kings,
Should turn on flying hours, and catch of moments.
Dryden.

4. The act of taking quickly from another.

Several quires, placed one over against another, and taking the voice by catches anthemwise, give great pleasure. Bacon.

5. A song sung in succession, where one catches it from another.

This is the tune of our catch, play'd by the picture of nobody. Shakspeare's Tempest.

Far be from thence the glutton parasite,
Singing his drunken catches all the night. Dryden.

The meat was serv'd, the bowls were crown'd,
Catches were sung, and healths went round. Prior.

6. The thing caught; profit; advantage.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out your brains; he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

7. A snatch; a short interval of action.

It has been writ by catches, with many intervals. Locke.

8. A taint; a slight contagion.

We retain a catch of those pretty stories, and our awakened imagination smiles in the recollection. Granville's Scepsis.

9. Any thing that catches and holds, as a hook.

10. A small swift-sailing ship: often written ketch.

CA'TCHER, kâtsh'ûr. n. s. [from catch.]

1. He that catches.

2. That in which any thing is caught.

Scallops will move so strongly, as oftentimes to leap out of the catcher wherein they are caught. Grew's Musæum.

CA'TCHFLY, kâtsh'fli. n. s. [from catch and fly.] A plant; a species of campion; which see.

CA'TCHPOLL, kâtsh'pôle. n. s. [from catch and poll.] A serjeant; a bumbailiff.

Catchpoll, though now it be used as a word of contempt, yet, in ancient times, it seems to have been used without reproach, for such as we now call serjeants of the mace, or any other that uses to arrest men upon any cause. Cowell.

They call all temporal businesses undersheriffries, as if they were but matters for undersheriffs and catchpolls: though many times those undersheriffries do more good than their high speculations. Bacon.

Another monster.
Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd
A catchpoll, whose polluted hands the gods
With force incredible and magic charms
Erst have endued, if he his ample palm
Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay
Of debtor. Philips.

CA'TCHWORD, kâtsh'wûrd. n. s. [from catch and word. With printers.] The word at the corner of the page under the last line, which is repeated at the top of the next page.

CATE, kâte. n. s. Food; something to be eaten. This is scarcely read in the singular. See CATES.

We'll see what cates you have,
For soldiers stomachs always serve them well. Shak.

CATECHE'TICAL, kât-ê-kĕt'ê-kâl. adj. [from κατηχίω.] Consisting of questions and answers.

Socrates introduced a catechetical method of arguing; he would ask his adversary question upon question, till he convinced him, out of his own mouth, that his opinions were wrong. Addison's Spectator.

CATECHE'TICALLY, kât-ê-kĕt'ê-kâl-lé. adv [from catechetical.] In the way of question and answer.

To CA'TECHISE, kât'ê-kîze. v. a. [κατηχίω.]

1. To instruct by asking questions, and correcting the answers.

I will catechise the world for him; that is, make questions, and bid them answer. Shaksp. Othello.

Had those three thousand fools been catechised by our modern casuists, we had seen a wide difference. Decay of Piety.

2. To question; to interrogate; to examine; to try by interrogatories.

Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise
My piked man of countries. Shaksp. King John.

There flies about a strange report,
Of some express arriv'd at court;
I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
And catechis'd in every street. Swift.

CA'TECHISER, kât'ê-kî-zûr.[160] n. s. [from To catechise.] One who catechises.

CA'TECHISM, kât'ê-kizm. n. s. [from κατηχίζω.] A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, concerning religion.

Ways of teaching there have been sundry always usual in God's church; for the first introduction of youth to the knowledge of God, the Jews even till this day have their catechisms. Hooker.

He had no catechism but the creation, needed no study but reflection, and read no book but the volume of the world. South.

CA'TECHIST, kât'ê-kist. n. s. [κατηχιστής] One whose charge is to instruct by questions, or to question the uninstructed concerning religion.

None of years and knowledge was admitted, who had not been instructed by the catechist in this foundation, which the catechist received from the bishop. Hammond's Fundamentals.

CATECHU'MEN, kât-ê-kû'mĕn.[503] n. s. [κατηχούμενος.] One who is yet in the first rudiments of christianity; the lowest order of Christians in the primitive church.

The prayers of the church did not begin in St. Austin's time, till the catechumens were dismissed. Stillingfleet.

CATECHUME'NICAL, kât-ê-kû-mĕn'ê-kâl.[509] adj. [from catechumen.] Belonging to the catechumens. Dict.

CATEGO'RICAL, kât-ê-gŏr'ê-kâl. adj. [from category.] Absolute; adequate; positive; equal to the thing to be expressed.

The king's commissioners desired to know, whether the parliament's commissioners did believe that bishops were unlawful? They could never obtain a categorical answer. Clarendon

A single proposition, which is also categorical, may be divided again into simple and complex. Watts's Logick.

CATEGO'RICALLY, kât-ê-gŏr'ik-âl-ê. adv. [from categorical.]

1. Directly; expressly.

2. Positively; plainly

I dare affirm, and that categorically, in all parts wherever trade is great, and continues so, that trade must be nationally profitable. Child's Dic. of Trade.

CA'TEGORY, kât'ê-gŏr-ê. n. s. [κατηγορία.] A class; a rank; an order of ideas; a predicament.

The absolute infinitude, in a manner, quite changes the nature of beings, and exalts them into a different category. Cheyne.

CATENA'RIAN, kât-ê-nâ'rê-ân. adj. [from catena, Lat.] Relating to a chain; resembling a chain.

In geometry, the catenarian curve is formed by a rope or chain hanging freely between two points of suspension. Harris.

The back is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included marrow. Cheyne.

To CA'TENATE, kât'ê-nâte. v. a. [from catena, Lat.] To chain. Dict.

CATENA'TION, kât-ê-nâ'shûn. n. s. [from catena, Lat.] Link; regular connexion.

This catenation, or conserving union, whenever his pleasure shall divide, let go, or separate, they shall fall from their existence. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To CA'TER, kâ'tûr.[98] v. n. [from cates.] To provide food; to buy in victuals.

He that doth the ravens feed,
Yea providently caters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age. Shaksp. As you like it.

CA'TER, kâ'tûr. n. s. [from the verb.] Provider; collector of provisions, or victuals: misprinted perhaps for caterer.

The oysters dredged in this Lyner, find a welcomer acceptance, where the taste is cater for the stomach, than those of the Tamar. Carew.

CA'TER, kâ'tûr. n. s. [quatre, Fr.] The four of cards and dice.

CA'TER-COUSIN, kâ'tûr-kûz-zn. n. s. A corruption of quatre-cousin, from the ridiculousness of calling cousin or relation to so remote a degree.

His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are scarce cater-cousins. Shakspeare.

Poetry and reason, how come these to be cater-cousins? Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

CA'TERER, kâ'tûr-ûr. n. s. [from cater.] One employed to select and buy in provisions for the family; the provider or purveyor.

Let no scent offensive the chamber infest;
Let fancy, not cost, prepare all our dishes.
Let the caterer mind the taste of each guest,
And the cook in his dressing comply with their wishes. Ben Jonson's Tavern Academy.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

Seldom shall one see in cities or courts that athletick vigour, which is seen in poor houses, where nature is their cook, and necessity their caterer. South.

CA'TERESS, kâ'tûr-rês. n. s. [from cater.] A woman employed to cater, or provide victuals.

Impostor! do not charge innocent nature,
As if she would her children should be riotous
With her abundance: she, good cateress,
Means her provision only to the good. Milton.

CA'TERPILLAR, kât'tûr-pîl-lûr. n. s. [This word Skinner and Minshew are inclined to derive from chatte peluse, a weasel. It seems easily deducible from cates.

food, and piller, Fr. to rob; the animal that eats up the fruits of the earth.]

1. A worm which, when it gets wings, is sustained by leaves and fruits.

The caterpillar breedeth of dew and leaves; for we see infinite caterpillars breed upon trees and hedges, by which the leaves of the trees or hedges are consumed. Bacon.

Auster is drawn with a pot pouring forth water, with which descend grasshoppers, caterpillars, and creatures bred by moisture. Peacham.

2. Any thing voracious and useless

What a caterwauling do you keep here! If my lady has not called up her steward Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

Was no dispute between
The caterwauling brethren? Hudibras.

CATES, kâtes. n. s. [of uncertain etymology: Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate; which is not likely, because Junius observes, that the Dutch have kater in the same sense with our cater. It has no singular.] Viands; food; dish of meat; generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

The fair acceptance, Sir, creates
The entertainment perfect, not the cates. B. Jonson.

O wasteful riot, never well content
With low priz'd fare; hunger ambitious
Of cates by land and sea far fetcht and sent. Raleigh.

Alas, how simple to these cates,
Was that crude apple that diverted Eve. P. Lost.

They, by th' alluring odour drawn, in haste
Fly to the dulcet cates, and crowding sip
Their palatable bane. Philips.

With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board,
Then with ill-gotten wealth she bought a lord. Arbuthnot.

CA'TFISH, kât'fish. n. s. The name of a sea-fish in the West Indies; so called from its round head and large glaring eyes, by which they are discovered in hollow rocks. Phillips.

CA'THARPINGS, kâ-*th*ar'pîngs. n. s. Small ropes in a ship, running in little blocks from one side of the shrouds to the other, near the deck: they belong only to the main shrouds; and their use is to force the shrouds tight, for the ease and safety of the masts, when the ship rolls. Harris.

CATHA'RTICAL, kâ-*th*ar'tè-kâl. } adj. [κα-
CATHA'RTICK, kâ-*th*ar'tîk.[509] } θαρτικὸς.]
Purging medicines. The vermicular or peristaltick motion of the guts continually helps on their contents, from the pylorus to the rectum; and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid. By this only it is manifest, how a cathartic hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appendages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twiched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge. Quincy.

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough cathartical, though the chymists have not proved, that either gold or mercury hath any salt, much less any that is purgative. Boyle.

Lustrations and catharticks of the mind were sought for, and all endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions. Decay of Piety.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r,
Emeticks ranch, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.

To Caule, kåwk. See To Calk.

To Ca'uponate, kåw'pò-nàte. v. n. [caupono, Lat.] To keep a victualling-house; to sell wine or victuals. Dict.

Ca'usable, kåw'zâ-bl.[405] adj. [from causo, low Lat.] That which may be caused, or effected by a cause.

That may be miraculously effected in one, which is naturally causable in another. Brown's Vul. Err.

Ca'úsal, kåw'zâl. adj. [causalis, low Lat.] Relating to causes; implying or containing causes.

Every motion owning a dependence on pre-required motors, we can have no true knowledge of any, except we would distinctly pry into the whole method of causal concatenation. Glanville.

Causal propositions are, where two propositions are joined by causal particles; as, houses were not built, that they might be destroyed; Rehoboam was unhappy, because he followed evil counsel. Watts.

Causa'lity, kåw-zâl'ê-tè. n. s. [causalitas, low Lat.] The agency of a cause; the quality of causing.

As he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all, in his very essence, as being the soul of their causalities, and the essential cause of their existences. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

By an unadvised transiliency from the effect to the remotest cause, we observe not the connection, through the interposal of more immediate causalities. Glanville's Scepsis.

Ca'usally, kåw'zâl-lè. adv. [from causal.] According to the order or series of causes.

Thus may it more be causally made out, what Hippocrates affirmeth. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Causa'tion, kåw'zâ'shŭn. n. s. [from causo, low Lat.] The act or power of causing.

Thus doth he sometimes delude us in the conceits of stars and meteors, besides their allowable actions, ascribing effects thereunto of independent causation. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Ca'usative, kåw'zâ-tîv.[157] adj. [a term in grammar.] That expresses a cause or reason.

Causa'tor, kåw-zâ'tûr.[521 98] n. s. [from causo, low Lat.] A causer; an author of any effect.

Demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, and the invisible condition of the first causator, it was out of the power of earth, or the areopagy of hell, to work them from it. Brown.

CAUSE, kåwz. n. s. [causa, Lat.]

1. That which produces or effects any thing; the efficient.

The wise and learned, amongst the very heathens themselves, have all acknowledged some first cause, whereupon originally the being of all things dependeth: neither have they otherwise spoken of that cause, than as an agent, which knowing what and why it worketh, observeth, in working, a most exact order or law. Hooker.

Butterflies, and other flies, revive easily when they seem dead, being brought to the sun or fire; the cause whereof is the diffusion of the vital spirit, and the dilating of it by a little heat. Bacon.

Cause is a substance exerting its power into act, to make one thing begin to be. Locke.

2. The reason; motive to any thing.

The rest shall bear some other sight,
As cause will be obey'd. Shakspeare.

So great, so constant, and so general a practice, must needs have not only a cause, but also a great, a constant, and a general cause, every way commensurate to such an effect. South.

Thus, royal Sir! to see you landed here,
Was cause enough of triumph for a year. Dryden.

Æneas wond'ring stood: then ask'd the cause,
Which to the stream the crowding people draws. Dryden.

Even he,
Lamenting that there had been cause of enmity,
Will often wish fate had ordain'd you friends. Rowe.

3. Reason of debate; subject of litigation.

O madness of discourse,
That cause sets up with and against thyself!
Bifold authority. Shakspeare.

Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. Deuter.

4. Side; party; ground or principle of action or opposition.

Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had seduc'd my mind. Tickell.

To Cause, kåwz. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.

Never was man whose apprehensions are sober, and by pensive inspection advised, but hath found by an irresistible necessity one everlasting being all for ever causing, and all for ever sustaining. Raleigh.

It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none. South.

She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care,
To loath her life, and languish in despair? Dryden.

Things that move so swift as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

Ca'uselesly, kåwz'lês-lè. adv. [from causeless.] Without cause; without reason.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelesly, is a despiser of the law, and undervalues its authority. Taylor's Holy Living.

Ca'useless, kåwz'lês. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation.

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my truth yplight,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the same, I have no might:
To change love causeless, is reproach to warlike knight. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

And me and mine threats not with war but death;
Thus causeless hatred endless is uneath. Fairfax.

The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is no sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place. Hooker.

As women yet who apprehend
Some sudden cause of causeless fear,
Although that seeming cause take end,
A shaking through their limbs they find. Waller.

Alas! my fears are causeless and ungrounded,
Fantastick dreams, and melancholy fumes. Denham.

Ca'user, kåw'zŭr.[98] n. s. [from cause.] He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the causer of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakspeare.

Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial causer of moral effects. Rogers.

CA'USEY, CA'USEWAY, kâw'zė. kâwz'wâ. n. s. [chaussee, Fr. This word, by a false notion of its etymology, has been lately written causeway.] A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.

To Shuppim the lot came forth westward by the causey. 1 Chron. xxvi. 16.

The other way Satan went down,
The causeway to hell-gate. Milton.

But that broad causeway will direct your way,
And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryd.

Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows;
Whose seats the weary traveller repose. Pope.

CA'USTICAL, kâws'tė-kâl. adj. [καυστικὸς.] CA'USTICK, kâws'tik. Epithets of medicaments which destroy the texture of the parts to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by extreme minuteness, asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids, and change what they are applied to into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacuity in the part. Quincy.

If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines, or escaroticks. Wiseman's Surg.

I proposed eradicating by escaroticks, and began with a caustick stone. Wiseman's Surgery.

Air too hot, cold, and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astringent, and coagulating particles. Arbuthnot.

CA'USTICK, kâws'tik. n. s. A burning application.

It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r,
Emeticks ranch, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.

CA'UTEL, kâw'tėl. n. s. [cautela, Lat.] Caution; scruple: a word disused.

Perhaps he loves you now;
And now no soil of cautel doth besmirch
The virtue of his will. Shakspeare.

CA'UTELOUS, kâw'tė-lûs. adj. [cauteleux, Fr.]

1. Cautious; wary; provident. Not in use.

Palladio doth wish, like a cautelous artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good share in the burden. Wotton.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautelous and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and sly shifts. Spenser on Ireland.

Your son
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice. Shakspeare.

CA'UTELOUSLY, kâw'tė-lûs-lė. adv. [from cautelous.]

1. Cunningly; slily; treacherously. Not in use.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cautelously get the start and advantage; yet they will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.

2. Cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not resolved of the sciatica side of Jacob, do cautelously, in their diet, abstain from both. Brown.

CAUTERIZA'TION, kâw-tûr-rė-zâ'shûn. n. s. [from cauterize.] The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustic medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no such bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wiseman.

To CA'UTERIZE, kâw'tûr-ize. v. a. [cauteriser, Fr.] To burn with the cautery.

For each true word a blister, and each false
Be cauterizing to the root o' th' tongue,
Consuming it with speaking. Shakspeare.

No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the insecta, but is bred of a duller matter. Bacon's Natural History.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp's Surgery.

CA'UTERY, kâw'tûr-rė.[555] n. s. [καίω, uro.]

Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustick medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead parts to the quick; or to stop the effusion of blood, by searing up the vessels. Quincy.

In the heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wiseman's Surgery.

CA'UTION, kâw'shûn. n. s. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness against evil.

2. Security for.

Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might assure with as much assurance as worldly matters bear. Sidney.

The Cedar, upon this new acquest, gave him part of Baccharia for caution for his disbursements. Howel.

The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted. Clarendon.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution, by the means of sureties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. Provision or security against.

In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off. L'Estrange.

4. Provisionary precept.

Attention to the forementioned symptoms affords the best cautions and rules of diet, by way of prevention. Arbuthnot.

5. Warning.

To CA'UTION, kâw'shûn. v. a. [from the noun.] To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various snare?
Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare
The diff'rent shapes thou pleasest to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy? Prior.

You caution'd me against their charms,
But never gave me equal arms. Swift.

CA'UTIONARY, kâw'shûn-â-rė. adj. [from caution.] Given as a pledge, or in security.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southerne.

Is there no security for the island of Britain? Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea-ports to give us for securing trade? Swift.

CA'UTIOUS, kâw'shûs.[292] adj. [from cautus, Lat.] Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage. Swift.

CA'UTIOUSLY, kâw'shûs-lė. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive, wary manner; warily.

They know how fickle common lovers are:
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.

CA'UTIOUSNESS, kâw'shûs-nės. n. s. [from cautious.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.

I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness. King Charles.

We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived. Addison.

To CAW, kâw. v. n. [taken from the sound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Russet-pated choughs, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report. Shakspeare.

A walk of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows upon the tops seem to be cawing in another region. Addison.

The rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds,
And ceaseless caws. Thomson's Spring.

To CEASE, sėse. v. n. [cesser, Fr. cesso, Lat.]

1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist: with from before a noun.

The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare,
My brother's be your most peculiar care. Dryden.

2. To fail; to be extinct; to pass away.

The poor man shall never cease out of the land. Deuteronomy.

The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense, and intellection, cease from that moles corporea, and are no longer in it. Hale.

3. To be at an end.

But now the wonder ceases, since I see
She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee. Dryden.

4. To rest.

The ministers of Chirst have ceased from their labours. Spratt.

To CEASE, sėse. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.

Importune him for monies: be not ceas'd
With slight denial. Shakspeare.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it, as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still. Bacon's Natural History.

Cease then this impious rage. Milton.

But he, her fears to cease,
Sent down the meek-eyed peace. Milton.

The discord is complete, nor can they cease
The dire debate, nor yet command the peace. Dryd.

CEASE, sėse. n. s. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure: perhaps for decease.

The cease of majesty
Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws
What's near it with it. Shakspeare.

CE'ASELESS, sėse'lės. adj. [from cease.] Incessant; perpetual; continual; without pause; without stop; without end.

My guiltless blood must quench the ceaseless fire,
On which my endless tears were bootless spent. Fairfax.

All these with ceaseless praise his works behold,
Both day and night. Milton.

Like an oak
That stands secure, though all the winds employ
Their ceaseless roar; and only sheds its leaves,

Or mast, which the revolving spring restores.
Philips.

CE'CITY, sês'ê-tê.[503 124 511] n. s. [cæcitas, Lat.] Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours. Brown.

CECU'TIENCY, sê-kû'shê-ên-sê. n. s. [cæcutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness; cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CE'DAR, sê'dûr.[88] n. s. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinated. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly cloathed with green leaves, so regularly, as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. Maundrel, in his Travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and sound. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw-dust is though to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings; and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thousand years sound. Miller.

I must yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle;
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept;
Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'rful wind.
Shakspeare.

CE'DRINE, sêd'drîn.[140] adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

To CEIL, sêle. v. a. [cælo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover, the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he over-laid with fine gold. 2 Chronicles.

How will he, from his house ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head? Decay of Piety.

CE'ILING, sê'ling. n. s. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

And now the thicken'd sky
Like a dark ceiling stood; down rushed the rain
Impetuous. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night,
Strike on the polished glass their trembling light,
The glitt'ring species here and there divide,
And cast their dubious beams from side to side:
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flash the glaring day. Dryden.

CE'LANDINE, sêl'ân-dîne.[149] n. s. [chelidoneum, Lat.] A plant.

The swallows use celandine, the linnet euphragia. More.

CE'LATURE, sêl-â-tshûre.[461] n. s. [cælatura, Lat.] The art of engraving, or cutting in figures.

To CE'LEBRATE, sêl'lê-brâte.[91] v. a. [celebro, Lat.]

1. To praise; to commend; to give praise to; to make famous.

The songs of Sion were psalms and pieces of poetry, that adored or celebrated the Supreme Being. Addison.

I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have stood the test of so many different ages. Addison.

2. To distinguish by solemn rites; to perform solemnly.

He slew all them that were gone to celebrate the sabbath. 2 Maccabees.

On the feast day, the father cometh forth, after divine service, into a large room, where the feast is celebrated. Bacon.

3. To mention in a set or solemn manner, whether of joy or sorrow.

This pause of pow'r 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;
While England celebrates your safe return. Dryden.

CELEBRA'TION, sêl-ê-brâ'shûn. n. s. [from celebrate.]

1. Solemn performance; solemn remembrance.

He labour'd to drive sorrow from her, and to hasten the celebration of their marriage. Sidney.

He shall conceal it,
While you are willing it shall come to note;
What time we will our celebration keep,
According to my birth. Shakspeare.

During the celebration of this holy sacrament, you attend earnestly to what is done by the priest. Taylor.

2. Praise; renown; memorial.

No more shall be added in this place, his memory deserving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety, and virtue, have been attained by few. Clarendon.

Some of the ancients may be thought sometimes to have used a less number of letters, by the celebration of those who have added to their alphabet. Holder's Elements of Speech.

CELE'BRIOUS, sê-lê'brê-ûs.[505] adj. [celeber, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted. Not in use.

The Jews, Jerusalem, and the Temple, having been always so celebrious; yet when, after their captivities, they were dispoiled of their glory, even then the Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured with sacrifices the Most High God, whom that nation worshipped. Grew.

CELE'BRIOUSLY, sê-lê'brê-ûs-lê. adv. [from celebrious.] In a famous manner.

CELE'BRIOUSNESS, sê-lê'brê-ûs-nês. n. s. [from celebrious.] Renown; fame.

CELE'BRITY, sê-lêb'brê-tê.[511] n. s. [celebritas, Lat.] Public and splendid transaction.

The manner of her receiving, and the celebrity of the marriage, were performed with great magnificence. Bacon.

CELE'RIACK, sê-lê'rê-âk. n. s. A spcies of parsley: it is also called turnep rooted celery.

CELE'RITY, sê-lêr'rê-tê. n. s. [celeritas, Lat.] Swiftness; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celerity of discourse; for, perceiving at the first but only some cause of suspicion and fear lest it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good. Hooker.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celerity to make head against them. Bacon.

Thus with imagin'd wings, our swift scene flies,
In motion with no less celerity
Than that of thought. Shakspeare.

Three things concur to make a percussion great; the bigness, the density, and the celerity of the body moved. Digby.

Whatever encreaseth the density of the blood, even without encreasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot.

CE'LERY, sêl'ê-rê. n. s. A species of parsley; which see.

CELE'STIAL, sê-lês'tshâl.[272] adj. [celestis, Lat.]

1. Heavenly; relating to the superiour regions.

There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning. Shaks.

The ancients commonly applied celestial descriptions of other climes to their own. Brown.

2. Heavenly; relating to the blessed state.

Play that sad note
I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to. Shakspeare.

3. Heavenly, with respect to excellence.

Canst thou pretend desire, whom zeal inflam'd
To worship, and a pow'r celestial nam'd? Dryden.

Telemachus his bloomy face
Glowing celestial sweet, with godlike grace. Pope.

CELE'STIAL, sê-lês'tshâl.[464] n. s. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

Thus affable and mild the prince precedes,
And to the dome th' unknown celestial leads. Pope.

CELE'STIALLY, sê-lês'tshâl-lê. adv. [from celestial.] In a heavenly manner.

To CELE'STIFY, sê-lês'tê-fî. v. a. [from celestis, Lat.] To give something of heavenly nature to any thing. Not used.

We should affirm that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terrestrified; and earth but heaven celestified, or that each part above had influence upon its affinity below. Brown.

CE'LIACK, sê'lê-âk. adj. [κοιλία the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.

The blood moving slowly through the celiack and mesenterick arteries, produces complaints. Arbuth.

CE'LIBACY, sêl'ê-bâ-sê. n. s. [from cælebs; Lat.] Single life; unmarried state.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty. Spectator.

By teaching them how to carry themselves in their relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, they have, without question, adorned the gospel, glorified God, and benefitted man, much more than they could have done in the devoutest and strictest celibacy. Atterbury.

CE'LIBATE, sêl'ê-bât.[91] n. s. [cælibatus, Lat.] Single life

The males oblige themselves to celibate, and then multiplication is hindered. Graunt.

CELL, sêll. n. s. [cella, Lat.]

1. A small cavity or hollow place.

The brain contains ten thousand cells;
In each some active fancy dwells. Prior.

How bees for ever, though a monarch reign,
Their sep'rate cells and properties maintain. Pope.

2. The cave or little habitation of a religious person.

Besides she did intend confession
At Patrick's cell this ev'n; and there she was not. Shakspeare.

Then did religion in a lazy cell,
In empty, airy contemplations dwell. Denham.

3. A small and close apartment in a prison.

4. Any small place of residence; a cottage.
Mine eyes he clos'd, but open left the cell
Of fancy, my internal sight. Milton's Paradise Lost.
For ever in this humble cell
Let thee and I together dwell. Prior.
In cottages and lowly cells
True piety neglected dwells;
Till call'd to heav'n, its native seat,
Where the good man alone is great. Somerville.

5. Little bags or bladders, where fluids, or matter of different sorts, are lodged; common both to animals and plants. Quincy.

CE'LLAR, sĕl'lŭr.[88] n. s. [cella, Lat.] A place under ground, where stores and liquors are reposited.
If this fellow had lived in the time of Cato, he would, for his punishment, have been confined to the bottom of a cellar during his life. Peacham.

CE'LLARAGE, sĕl'lŭr-ĭdje.[90] n. s. [from cellar.] The part of the building which makes the cellars.
Come on, you hear this fellow in the cellarage. Shakspeare.
A good ascent makes a house wholesome, and gives opportunity for cellarage. Mortimer's Husb.

CE'LLARIST, sĕl'lŭr-ĭst.[555] n. s. [cellarius, Lat.] The butler in a religious house. Dict.

CE'MENT, sĕm'mĕnt.[492] n. s. [cæmentum, Lat.]

1. The matter with which two bodies are made to cohere, as mortar or glue.
Your temples burned in their cement, and your franchises confined into an augre's bore. Shaksp.
There is a cement compounded of flour, whites of eggs, and stones powdered, that becometh hard as marble Bacon.
You may see divers pebbles, and a crust of cement or stone between them, as hard as the pebbles themselves. Bacon.
The foundation was made of rough stone, joined together with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer consisting of small stones and cement. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Bond of union in friendship.
Let not the peace of virtue, which is set
Betwixt us as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram to batter. Shaksp.
What cement should unite heaven and earth, light and darkness? Glanville.
Look over the whole creation, and you shall see, that the band or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabrick, is gratitude. South.

To CEME'NT, sĕ-mĕnt'. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite by means of something interposed.
But how the fear of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up.
The petty difference, we yet not know. Shakspeare.
Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all loose and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux: even an heap of sand, or fine powder, will suffer no hollowness within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Love with white lead cements his wings;
White lead was sent us to repair
Two brightest, brittlest, earthly things,
A lady's face, and china ware. Swift.

They laid him upon some of their garments, and fell to rub and chafe him, till they brought him to recover both breath, the servant, and warmth, the companion of living. Sidney.

At last, recovering heart, he does begin
To rub her temples, and to chafe her skin. Fairy Q.
Soft, and more soft, at ev'ry touch it grew;
Like pliant wax, when chafing hands reduce
The former mass to form, and frame to use. Dryd.

2. To heat by rage or hurry.

Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry boar chafed with sweat? Shaksp.

3. To perfume.

Lilies more white than snow
New fall'n from heav'n, with violets mix'd, did grow;
Whose scent so chaf'd the neighbour air, that you
Would surely swear Arabick spices grew. Suckling.

4. To make angry; to inflame passion.

Her intercession chaf'd him so,
When she for thy repeal was suppliant,
That to close prison he commanded her. Shakspeare.

An offer of pardon more chafed the rage of those, who were resolved to live or die together. Sir John Hayward.

For all that he was inwardly chafed with the heat of youth and indignation, against his own people as well as the Rhodians, he moderated himself betwixt his own rage, and the offence of his soldiers. Knolles's History of the Turks.

This chaf'd the boar; his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden.

To CHAFE, tshâfe. v. n.

1. To rage; to fret; to fume; to rave; to boil.

Therewith he 'gan full terribly to roar,
And chaf'd at that indignity right sore. Spenser.

He will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter. Shakspeare.

Be lion mettled, proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are. Shakspeare.

How did they fume, and stamp, and roar, and chafe.
And swear!—not Addison himself was safe. Pope.

2. To fret against any thing.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores. Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar

CHAIR,[52] tshâre. n. s. [chair, Fr.]

1. A moveable seat.

Whether thou choose Cervantes' serious air,
Or laugh and shake in Rabelais' easy chair,
Or praise the court, or magnify mankind,
Or thy griev'd country's copper chains unbind. Pope.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person, without a back. Watts's Logick.

2. A seat of justice, or of authority.

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.
—Is the chair empty? Is the sword unsway'd?
Is the king dead? Shakspeare's Richard III.

If thou be that princely eagle's bird,
Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun;
For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom, say;
Either that 's thine, or else thou wert not his.
Shakspeare.

The honour'd gods
Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supply with worthy men. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Her grace sat down to rest awhile,
In a rich chair of state. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Of his own chamber. Shakspeare.

A natural cave in a rock may have something not much unlike to parlours or chambers. Bentley.

2. Any retired room.

The dark caves of death, and chambers of the grave. Prior

3. Any cavity or hollow.

Petit has, from an examination of the figure of the eye, argued against the possibility of a film's existence in the posteriour chamber. Sharp.

4. A court of justice.

In the Imperial chamber this vulgar answer is not admitted, viz. I do not believe it, as the matter is propounded and alleged. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. The lower part of a gun where the charge is lodged.

6. A species of great gun.

Names given them, as cannons, demi-cannons, chambers, arquebuse, musket, &c. Camden's Remains.

7. The cavity where the powder is lodged in a mine.

To CHA'MBER, tshâme'bŭr. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be wanton; to intrigue.

Let us walk honestly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness. Romans.

2. To reside as in the chamber.

The best blood chamber'd in his bosom. Shaksp.

CHA'MBERER, tshâme'bûr-ûr. n. s. [from chamber.] A man of intrigue.

I have not those soft parts of conversation,
That chamberers have. Shakspeare.

CHA'MBERFELLOW, tshâme'bûr-fêl-lô. n. s. [from chamber and fellow.] One that lies in the same chamber.

It is my fortune to have a chamberfellow, with whom I agree very well in many sentiments. Spectator.

CHA'MBERLAIN, tshâme'bûr-lîn.[208] n. s. [from chamber.]

1. Lord great chamberlain of England is the sixth officer of the crown; a considerable part of his function is at a coronation; to him belongs the provision of every thing in the house of lords; he disposes of the sword of state; under him are the gentleman usher of the black rod, yeomen ushers, and doorkeepers. To this office the duke of Ancaster makes an hereditary claim. Chambers.

2. Lord chamberlain of the household has the oversight of all officers belonging to the king's chambers, except the precinct of the bedchamber. Chambers.

Humbly complaining to her deity,
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty. Shaksp.

He was made lord steward, that the staff of chamberlain might be put into the hands of his brother. Clarendon.

A patriot is a fool in every age,
Whom all lord chamberlains allow the stage. Pope.

3. A servant who has the care of the chambers.

Think'st thou
That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
Will put thy shirt on warm? Shakspeare.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
We will with wine and wassel convince. Shaks.

He serv'd at first Æmilia's chamberlain.
Dryden's Fables.

4. A receiver of rents and revenues; as, chamberlain of the exchequer, of Chester, of the city of London. Chambers.

CHA'MBERLAINSHIP, tshâme'bûr-lîn-shîp. n. s. [from chamberlain.] The office of a chamberlain.

CHA'MBERMAID, tshâme'bûr-mâde. n. s. [from chamber and maid.] A maid whose business is to dress a lady, and wait in her chamber.

Men will not hiss,
The chambermaid was named Ciss. Ben Jonson.

Some coarse country wench, almost decay'd,
Trudges to town, and first turns chambermaid. Pope.

When he doubted whether a word were intelligible or no, he used to consult one of his lady's chambermaids. Swift.

If these nurses ever presume to entertain the girls with the common follies practised by chambermaids among us, they are publicly whipped. Swift.

To CH'AMBLET, kâm'lêt. v. a. [from camelot. See CAMELOT.] To vary; to variegate.

Some have the veins more varied and chambleted; as oak, whereof wainscot is made. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CHA'MBREL of a horse, kâm'rîl. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg. Farrier's Dict.

CHAME'LEON, kâ-mê-lê-ûn. n. s. [χαμαίλεων.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it fastens itself to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its nose long, ending in an obtuse point; its back is sharp, its skin plaited, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been observed to feed on flies, catched with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also shrinks, and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied; but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour; and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes, when it is handled, it seems speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and sometimes, if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body. Calmet.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies, of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet spotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon;
Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage. Shaks.

One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gasp after. Decay of Piety.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives
The colour of the thing to which he cleaves. Dryd.

As the chameleon, which is known
To have no colours of his own,
But borrows from his neighbour's hue,
His white or black, his green or blue. Prior.

To CHA'MFER, tshâm'fûr. v. a. [chambrer, Fr.] To channel; to make furrows or gutters upon a column.

CHA'MFER, tshâm'fûr, } n. s. [from To
CHA'MFRET, tshâm'frêt, } chamfer.] A small furrow or gutter on a column.

CHA'MLET, kâm'lêt. n. s. [See CAMELOT.] Stuff made originally of camel's hair.

To make a chamlet, draw five lines, waved overthwart, if your diapering consist of a double line. Peacham on Drawing

CHA'MOIS, shâ-môê. n. s. [chamois, Fr.] An animal of the goat kind, whose skin is made into soft leather, called among us shammy.

These are the beasts which you shall eat; the ox, the sheep, and wild ox, and the chamois. Deuteronomy.

CHA'MOMILE, kâm-ô-mile.[363] n. s. [χαμαίμηλον.] An odoriferous plant.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still,
Embathed balm, and cheerful galingale,
Fresh costmary, and breathful chamomile,
Dull poppy, and drink quick'ning setuale.
Spenser.

For though the chamomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. Shakspeare.

Posset drink with chamomile flowers.
Floyer on the Humours.

To CHAMP, tshâmp. v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.

Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in smoke, and betel is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.

The fiend reply'd not, overcome with rage;
But, like a proud steed reign'd, went haughty on,
Champing his iron curb. Milton's Paradise Lost.

At his command
The steeds caparison'd with purple stand,
And champ between their teeth the foaming gold.
Dryden.

2. To devour, with violent action of the teeth.

A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

To CHAMP, tshâmp. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occasion to Musidorus to come near him. Sidney.

They began to repent of that they had done, and irefully to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker.

His jaws did not answer equally to one another; but, by his frequent motion and champing with them; it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Wiseman.

CHA'MPAIGN, tshâm-pâne'. n. s. [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country.

In the abuses of the customs, meseems, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd,
We make thee lady. Shakspeare.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will continually seek occasion to extend his limits unto the further borders thereof. Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without disarray, by the space of some miles, part of the way champaign, unto the city of Gaunt, with less loss of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his side two rivers flow'd,
Th' one winding, th' other straight, and left between Fair champaign, with less rivers interven'd. Milton.

CHA'MPERTORS, shâm'-pêr-tûrz. n. s. [from champerty. In law.] Such as move suits; or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and pursue, at their proper costs, to have part of the land in contest, or part of the gains. Cowell.

CHA'MPERTY, shâm'pêr-tê. n. s. [champart, Fr. In law.] A maintenance of any man in his suit, while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowell.

CHAMPI'GNON, shâm-pîn'yûn. n. s. [champignon, Fr.] A kind of mushroom.

He viler friends with doubtful mushrooms treats,
Secure for you, himself champignons eats. Dryden.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob. Woodward.

CHA'MPION, tshâm'pê-ûn, n. s. [champion, Fr. campio, low Lat.]

1. A man who undertakes a cause in single combat.

In many armies, the matter should be tried by duel between two champions. Bacon.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions fierce,
Strive here for mast'ry, and to battle bring Their embryon atoms. Milton's Paradise Lost.

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy!
Dryden.

At length the adverse admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right.
Dryden.

2. A hero; a stout warriour; one bold in contest.

A stouter champion never handled sword. Shaksp.

This makes you incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for errour. Locke.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trieth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another. Cowell.

To CHA'MPION, tshăm'pē-ŭn. v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come, Fate, into the list,
And champion me to the utterance. Shakspeare.

CHANCE, tshânse.[78][79] n. s. [chance, Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakspeare.

The only man, of all that chance could bring
To meet my arms, was worth the conquering.
Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them. Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring: applied to persons.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To say a thing is chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth; as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents. South.

The beauty I beheld has struck me dead;
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;
Poison is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance.
Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance direction, which thou canst not see. Pope.

4. Event; success; luck: applied to things.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel! Shakspeare.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits,
That common chances common men could bear.
Shakspeare.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead where I may meet
Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side,
Or in thick shade retir'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this address. Swift.

CHANCE, tshânse. adj. [It is seldom used but in composition.] Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would say,
They met like chance companions on the way.
Dryden.

I would not take the gift,
Which, like a toy, dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lay for the next chance comer. Dryden.

To CHANCE, tshânse. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think;——
Thou hast thy mistress still. Shakspeare.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother? Shakspeare.

Ay, Casca, tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,
That Cæsar looks so sad. Shakspeare.

He chanced upon divers of the Turks' victuallers, whom he easily took. Knolles's History of the Turks.

I chose the safer sea, and chanc'd to find
A river's mouth impervious to the wind.
Pope's Odyssey.

CHA'NCEFUL, tshânse'fûl. adj. [chance and full.] Hazardous. Out of use.

Myself would offer you t' accompany
In this advent'rous chanceful jeopardy. Spenser.

CHANCE-MEDLEY, tshânse-mĕd'lē. n. s. [from chance and medley.] In law.

The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway-side, by which many usually travel, and cast down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain: in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself. Cowell.

If such an one should have the ill hap, at any time, to strike a man dead with a smart saying, it ought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chance-medley. South.

CHA'NCEABLE, tshân'sâ-bl. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia. Sidney.

CHA'NCEL, tshân'sĕl. n. s. [from cancelli, Lat. lattices, with which the chancel was enclosed.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be allowable or no, that the minister should say service in the chancel. Hooker.

The chancel of this church is vaulted with a single stone of four feet in thickness, and an hundred and fourteen in circumference. Addison on Italy.

CHA'NCELLOR, tshân'sĕl-lûr. n. s. [cancellarius, Lat. chancellier, Fr. from cancellare literas, vel scriptum lineâ per medium ductâ damnare; and seemeth of itself to be derived à cancellis, which signify all one with κιγκλιδες a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment seats were compassed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.

Quæsitis regni tibi cancellarius Angli,
Primus solliciti mente petendus erit.

Hic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,
Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.

Verses of Nigel de Wetekre to the bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.

1. The highest judge of the law.

Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court; grapharios, scil, qui conscribendis & excipiendis judicum actis dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and, not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjecteth himself only to the law of nature and conscience. Cowell.

Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie!
Go, buckle to the law. Is this an hour.
To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor.
Dryden, jun.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms, of their government; so that he was, in a manner, chancellor of Athens. Swift.

2. Chancellor in the Ecclesiastical Court. A bishop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. Chancellor of a Cathedral. A dignitary whose office it is to superintend the regular exercise of devotion.

4. Chancellor of the Exchequer. An officer who sits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber. He has power, with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of first fruits. The court of equity is in the exchequer chamber, and is held before the lord treasurer, chancellor, and barons, as that of common law before the barons only. Cowell. Chambers.

5. Chancellor of an University. The principal magistrate, who at Oxford holds his office during life, but at Cambridge he may be elected every three years.

6. Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their deliberations, and delivers their acts under the seal of their order. Chambers.

CHA'NCELLORSHIP, tshân'sĕl-lûr-ship. n. s. The office of chancellor.

The Sunday after More gave up his chancellorship of England, he came himself to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman-usher, Madam, my lord is gone. Camden.

CHA'NCERY, tshân'sûr-ē. n. s. [from chancellor; probably chancellery, then shortened.] The court of equity and conscience, moderating the rigour of other courts, that are tied to the letter of the law; whereof the lord chancellor of England is the chief judge, or the lord keeper of the great seal. Cowell.

The contumacy and contempt of the party must be signified in the court of chancery, by the bishop's letters under the seal episcopal. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHA'NCRE, shânk'ûr. [416] n. s [chancre, Fr.] An ulcer usually arising from venereal maladies.

It is possible he was not well cured, and would have relapsed with a chancre. Wiseman.

CHA'NCROUS, shânk'rûs. adj. [from chan-

cre.] Having the qualities of a chancre; ulcerous.

You may think I am too strict in giving so many internals in the cure of so small an ulcer as a chancre, or rather a chancrous callus. Wiseman.

CHANDELI'ER, shân-dê-lêêr'. n. s. [chandelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

CHA'NDLER, tshând'lûr. n. s. [chandelier, Fr.] An artisan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

The sack that thou hast drunken me, would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandlers in Europe. Shaksp.

But whether black or lighter dyes are worn,
The chandler's basket, on his shoulder born,
With tallow spots thy coat. Gay.

CHA'NFRIN, shân'frên. n. s. [old Fr.] The fore part of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows, down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE, tshânje.[74] v. a. [changer, Fr. cambia, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another.

He that cannot look into his own estate, had need choose well whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtile. Bacon's Essays.

2. To quit any thing for the sake of another: with for before the thing taken or received.

Persons grown up in the belief of any religion, cannot change that for another, without applying their understanding duly to consider and compare both. South.

The French and we still change; but here's the curse,
They change for better, and we change for worse. Dryden.

3. To give and take reciprocally: with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take.

To secure thy content, look upon those thousands, with whom thou wouldst not, for any interest, change thy fortune and condition. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

4. To alter; to make other than it was.

Thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my countenance for this arrest;
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. Shaksp.

Whatsoever is brought upon thee, take cheerfully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate. Ecclus.

For the elements were changed in themselves by a kind of harmony; like as in a psaltery notes change the name of the tune, and yet are always sounds. Wisdom.

5. To mend the disposition or mind.

I would she were in heaven, so she could
Intreat some pow'r to change this currish Jew. Shaksp.

6. To discount a large piece of money into several smaller.

A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moidore, when a customer comes for a crown's worth of goods. Swift.

7. To change a horse, or to change hand, is to turn or bear the horse's head from one hand to the other, from the left to the right, or from the right to the left. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE, tshânje. v. n.

1. To undergo change; to suffer alteration: as, his fortune may soon change, though he is now so secure.

One Julia, that his changing thought forgot,
Would better fit his chamber. Shaksp.

2. To change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution.

I am weary of this moon; would he would change. Shaksp.

CHANGE, tshânje. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing.

Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you. Shaksp.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.

O wond'rous changes of a fatal scene,
Still varying to the last! Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill-breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set;
While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know
A diff'rent master, and a change of time. Prior.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprise,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!
While at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution.

Take seeds or roots, and set some of them immediately after the change, and others of the same kind immediately after the full. Bacon's Natural History.

4. Novelty; a state different from the former.

The hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shaksp.

Our fathers did, for change, to France repair;
And they, for change, will try our English air. Dryden.

5. [In ringing.] An alteration of the order in which a set of bells is sounded.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind.

I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. Judges.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces.

Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five-and-twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient. Swift.

8. Change for exchange; a place where persons meet to traffick and transact mercantile affairs.

The bar, the bench, the change, the schools and pulpits, are full of quacks, jugglers, and plagiaries. L'Estrange.

CHA'NGEABLE, tshânje'â-bl. adj. [from change.]

1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant.

A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour. L'Estrange.

As I am a man, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us all are so, even upon ridiculous accidents. Dryden.

2. Possible to be changed.

The fibrous or vascular parts of vegetables seem scarce changeable in the alimentary duct. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Having the quality of exhibiting different appearances.

Now the taylor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta; for thy mind is a very opal. Shaksp.

CHA'NGEABLENESS, tshânje'â-bl-nês. n. s. [from changeable.]

1. Inconstancy; fickleness.

At length he betrothed himself to one worthy to be liked, if any worthiness might excuse so unworthy a changeableness. Sidney.

There is no temper of mind more unmanly than that changeableness, with which we are too justly branded by all our neighbours. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Susceptibility of change.

If how long they are to continue in force, be no where expressed, then have we no light to direct our judgment concerning the changeableness or immutability of them, but considering the nature and quality of such laws. Hooker.

CHA'NGEABLY, tshânje'â-blê. adv. [from changeable.] Inconstantly

CHA'NGEFUL, tshânje'fûl. adj. [from change and full.] Full of change; inconstant; uncertain; mutable; subject to variation; fickle.

Unsound plots, and changeful orders, are daily devised for her good, yet never effectually prosecuted. Spenser.

Britain, changeful as a child at play.
Now calls in princes, and now turns away. Pope.

CHA'NGELING, tshânje'ling. n. s. [from change; the word arises from an odd superstitious opinion, that the fairies steal away children, and put others that are ugly and stupid in their places.]

1. A child taken or left in the place of another.

And her base elfin breed there for thee left:
Such men do changelings call, so chang'd by faries theft. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

She, as her attendant, hath
A lovely boy stol'n from an Indian king;
She never had so sweet a changeling. Shaksp.

2. An idiot; a fool; a natural.

Changelings and fools of heav'n, and thence shut out,
Wildly we roam in discontent about. Dryden.

Would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wise man? Locke.

3. One apt to change; a waverer.

Of fickle changelings and poor discontents,
That gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurly-burly innovation. Shaksp.

'Twas not long
Before from world to world they swung;
As they had turn'd from side to side,
And as they changelings liv'd, they died. Hudibras.

4. Any thing changed and put in the place of another: in ludicrous speech.

I folded the writ up in the form of the other,
Subscrib'd it, gave the impression, plac'd it safely,
The changeling never known. Shakspeare.

CHA'NGER, tshâne'jûr. n. s. [from change.] One that is employed in changing or discounting money; money-changer.

CHA'NNEL, tshân'nêl.[99] n. s. [canal, Fr. canalis, Lat.]

1. The hollow bed of running waters.

It is not so easy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain course, to change the channel, and turn their streams another way. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. Shaksp.

So th' injur'd sea, which from her wonted course,
To gain some acres, avarice did force;
If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
No longer will from her old channel stay. Waller

Had not the said strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the sea. Woodward.

The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams. Bentley.

2. Any cavity drawn longwise.

Complaint and hot desires, the lover's hell,
And scalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell. Dryden's Fables.

3. A strait or narrow sea, between two countries: as the British Channel, between Britain and France; St. George's Channel, between Britain and Ireland.

4. A gutter or furrow of a pillar.

To CHA'NNEL, tshân'nêl. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut any thing in channels.

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces. Shaksp.

The body of this column is perpetually channelled, like a thick plaited gown. Wotton's Architecture.

Torrents, and loud impetuous cataracts,
Roll down the lofty mountain's channell'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

To CHANT, tshânt.[79] v. a. [chanter, Fr.]

1. To sing.

Wherein the chearful birds of sundry kind
Do chant sweet musick. Fairy Queen.

2. To celebrate by song.

The poets chant it in the theatres, the shepherds in the mountains. Bramhall.

3. To sing in the cathedral service.

To CHANT, tshânt.[78] v. n. To sing; to make melody with the voice.

They chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of musick. Amos, vi. 7.

Heav'n heard his song, and hasten'd his relief;
And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,
And wing'd his flight, to chant aloft in air. Dryd.

CHANT, tshânt. n. s. [from the verb.] Song; melody.

A pleasant grove,
With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud. Milt.

CHA'NTER, tshân'tûr. n. s. [from chant.] A singer; a songster.

You curious chanters of the wood,
That warble forth dame Nature's lays. Wotton.

Jove's ethereal lays, resistless fire,
The chanter's soul and raptur'd song inspire,
Instinct divine! nor blame severe his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice. Pope.

CHA'NTICLEER, tshân'tê-klêêr. n. s. [from chanter and clair, Fr.] The name given to the cock, from the clearness and loudness of his crow.

And chearful chanticleer, with his note shrill,
Had warned once, that Phœbus' fiery car
In haste was climbing up the eastern hill. Spenser.

Hark, hark, I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer. Shaksp.

Stay, the chearful chanticleer
Tells you that the time is near. Ben Jonson.

These verses were mentioned by Chaucer, in the description of the sudden stir, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox. Camden's Remains.

Within this homestead liv'd without a peer,
For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer.
Dryden's Fables.

CHA'NTRESS, tshân'três. n. s. [from chant.] A woman singer.

Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy!
Thee, chantress of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.

CHA'NTRY, tshân'trê. n. s. [from chant.]

Chantry is a church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue, for the maintainance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint. Cowell.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,
Into the chantry by;
And, underneath that consecrated roof,
Plight me the full assurance of thy faith. Shak.

CHA'OS, kâ'ôs.[353] n. s. [chaos, Lat. χάος]

1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.

The whole universe would have been a confused chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confusion; irregular mixture.

Had I followed the worst, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of confusion, as some have done. K. Charles.

Their reason sleeps, but mimick fancy wakes,
Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes
From words and things, ill sorted, and misjoin'd;
The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind. Dryden.

3. Any thing where the parts are undistinguished.

We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.

Pleas'd with a work, where nothing's just or fit,
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit. Pope.

CHAO'TICK, kâ-ôt'tik. adj. [from chaos.] Resembling chaos; confused

When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthly particles subsided, then those several beds were, in all probability, reposited in the earth. Derham.

To CHAP, tshôp. v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut. This word seems originally the same with chop; nor were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referable to the same original sense.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chapping it in sundry places. Burnet.

Then would unbalanc'd heat licentious reign,
Crack the dry hill, and chap the russet plain. Blackmore.

CHAP, tshôp. n. s. [from the verb.] A cleft; an aperture; an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it, are filled up again. Burnet's Theory.

CHAP, tshôp. n. s. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound.
And part he churns, and part befoams the ground. Dryden.

The nether chap in the male skeleton is half an inch broader than in the female. Grew's Musæum.

CHAPE, tshâpe. n. s. [chappe, Fr.]

1. The catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; as the hook of a scabbard by which it sticks in the belt; the point by which a buckle is held to the back strap.

This is Monsieur Parolles, that had the whole theory of the war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger. Shaksp.

2. A brass or silver tip or case, that strengthens the end of the scabbard of a sword. Phillips's World of Words.

CHA'PEL, tshâp'êl. n. s. [capella, Lat.]

A chapel is of two sorts; either adjoining to a church, as a parcel of the same, which men of worth build; or else separate from the mother church, where the parish is wide, and is commonly called a chapel of ease, because it is built for the ease of one or more parishioners, that dwell too far from the church, and is served by some inferiour curate, provided for at the charge of the rector, or of such as have benefit by it, as the composition or custom is. Cowell.

She went in among those few trees, so closed in the tops together, as they might seem a little chapel. Sidney.

Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel? Shaks.

Where truth erecteth her church, he helps errour to rear up a chapel hard by. Howell.

A chapel will I build with large endowment. Dryden.

A free chapel is such as is founded by the king of England. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHA'PELESS, tshâpe'lês. adj. [from chape.] Wanting a chape.

An old rusty sword, with a broken hilt, and chapeless, with two broken points. Shaksp.

CHAPE'LLANY, tshâp'pêl-lên-nê. n. s. [from chapel.]

A chapellany is usually said to be that which does not subsist of itself, but is built and founded within some other church, and is dependent thereon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHA'PELRY, tshâp'pêl-rê. n. s. [from chapel.] The jurisdiction or bounds of a chapel.

CHA'PERON, shâp'rôn. n. s. [French.] A kind of hood or cap worn by the knights of the garter in their habits.

I will omit the honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament robes, chaperons, and caps of state. Camden.

CHA'PFALN, tshôp'fâln. adj. [from chap and faln.] Having the mouth shrunk.

A chapfaln beaver loosely hanging by
The cloven helm. Dryden

CHA'PITER, tshâp'-ê-tûr. n. s. [chapiteau, Fr.] The upper part or capital of a pillar.

He overlaid their chapiters and their fillets with gold. Exodus.

CHA'PLAIN, tshâp-lîn.[208] n. s. [capellanus, Lat.]

1. He that performs divine service in a chapel, and attends the king, or other person, for the instruction of him and his family, to read prayers, and preach. Cowell.

Wishing me to permit
John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour,
To hear from him a matter of some moment. Shak.

Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life. Shaksp.

2. One that officiates in domestic worship.

A chief governor can never fail of some worthless illiterate chaplain, fond of a title and precedence. Swift.

CHA'PLAINSHIP, tshâp'lîn-ship. n. s. [from chaplain.]

1. The office or business of a chaplain.

2. The possession or revenue of a chapel.

CHA'PLESS, tshôp'lês. adj. [from chap.] Without any flesh about the mouth.

Now chapless, and knocked about the mazzard with a sexton's spade. Shaksp.

Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
With reeky shanks and yellow chapless bones.
Shaksp.

CHA'PLET, tshâp'lêt. n. s. [chapelet, Fr.]

1. A garland or wreath to be worn about the head.

Upon old Hyems' chin, and icy crown,
An od'rous chaplet of sweet summer's buds,
Is, as in mockery, set. Shaksp.

I strangely long to know,
Whether they nobler chaplets wear,
Those that their mistress' scorn did bear,
Or those that were us'd kindly. Suckling.

All the quire was grac'd,
With chaplets green, upon their foreheads plac'd.
Dryden.

The winding ivy chaplet to invade,
And folded fern, that your fair forehead shade.
Dryden.

They made an humble chaplet for the king.
Swift.

2. A string of beads used in the Romish church for keeping an account of the number rehearsed of paternosters and avemarias. A different sort of chaplets is also used by the Mahometans.

3. [In architecture.] A little moulding carved into round beads, pearls, or olives.

4. [In horsemanship.] A couple of stirrup leathers, mounted each of them with a stirrup, and joining at top in a sort of leather buckle, which is called the head of the chaplet, by which they are fastened to the pummel of a saddle, after they have been adjusted to the length and bearing of the rider. Farrier's Dict.

5. A tuft of feathers on the peacock's head.

CHA'PMAN, tshâp'mân.[88] n. s. [ceapman. Sax.] A cheapner; one that offers as a purchaser.

Fair Diomede, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you intend to buy. Shak.

Yet have they seen the maps, and bought 'em too,
And understand 'em as most chapmen do.
Ben Jonson.

There was a collection of certain rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick; these were upon sale to the Jesuits at Antwerp, liquorish chapmen of such wares. Wotton.

He dressed two, and carried them to Samos, as the likeliest place for a chapman. L'Estrange.

Their chapmen they betray,
Their shops are dens, the buyer is their prey.
Dryden.

CHAPS, tshôps. n. s. [from chaft.]

1. The mouth of a beast of prey.

So on the downs we see
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go,
And past all hope, his chaps to frustrate so. Sidney.

Open your mouth; you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again. Shaksp.

Their whelps at home expect the promis'd food,
And long to temper their dry chaps in blood.
Dryden

2. It is used in contempt for the mouth of a man.

CHAPT, CHA'PPED, } tshpôt. { particip. pass. [of To chap.]

Like a table upon which you may run your finger without rubs, and your nail cannot find a joint; not horrid, rough, wrinkled, gaping, or chapt.
Ben Jonson.

Cooling ointment made,
Which on their sun-burnt cheeks and their chapt skins they laid. Dryden's Fables.

CHA'PTER, tshâp'-tûr. n. s. [chapitre, Fr. from capitulum, Lat.

1. A division of a book.

The first book we divide into three sections; whereof the first is these three chapters.
Burnet's Theory.

If these mighty men at chapter and verse, can produce then no scripture to overthrow our church ceremonies, I will undertake to produce scripture enough to warrant them. South.

2. From this comes the proverbial phrase, to the end of the chapter; throughout; to the end.

Money does all things; for it gives and it takes away, it makes honest men and knaves, fools and philosophers; and so forward, mutatis mutandis to the end of the chapter L'Estrange.

3. Chapter, from capitulum, signifieth, in our common law, as in the canon law, whence it is borrowed, an assembly of the clergy of a cathedral or collegiate church. Cowell.

The abbot takes the advice and consent of his chapter, before he enters on any matters of importance. Addison on Italy.

4. The place where delinquents receive discipline and correction. Ayliffe's Par.

5. A decretal epistle. Ayliffe's Parergon.

6. Chapter-house; the place in which assemblies of the clergy are held.

Though the canonical constitution does strictly require it to be made in the cathedral, yet it matters not where it be made, either in the choir or chapter-house. Ayliffe's Parerg.

CHA'PTREL, tshâp'-trêl. n. s. [probably from chapiter.] The capitals of pillars, or pilasters, which support arches, commonly called imposts.

Let the keystone break without the arch, so much as you project over the jaums with the chaptrels. Moxon.

CHAR, tshâr. n. s. [of uncertain derivation.] A fish found only in Winander meer, in Lancashire.

To CHAR, tshâr. v. a. [See CHARCOAL.] To burn wood to a black cinder.

Spraywood, in charring, parts into various cracks.
Woodward.

CHAR, tshâre. n. s. [cyꝛne work, Sax. Lye. It is derived by Skinner, either from charge, Fr. business; or caꝛc, Sax. care; or keeren, Dutch, to sweep.] Work done by the day; a single job or task.

A meer woman, and commanded
By such poor passion, as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chars. Shaksp.

She, harvest done, to char work did aspire;
Meat, drink, and twopence, were her daily hire.
Dryden.

To CHAR, tshâre. v. n. [from the noun.] To work at others' houses by the day, without being a hired servant.

CHA'R-WOMAN, tshâre'-wûm-ûn. n. s. [from char and woman.] A woman hired accidentally for odd work, or single days.

Get three or four char-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders. Swift.

CHA'RACTER, kâr'-âk-tûr.[363] n. s. [character. Lat. χαꝛακτηꝛ.]

1. A mark; a stamp; a representation.

In outward also her resembling less
His image, who made both; and less expressing
The character of that dominion giv'n
O'er other creatures. Paradise Lost.

2. A letter used in writing or printing.

But his neat cookery!——
He cut our roots in characters Shaksp.

The purpose is perspicuous, even as substance
Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shak.

It were much to be wished, that there were throughout the world but one sort of character for each letter, to express it to the eye; and that exactly proportioned to the natural alphabet formed in the mouth. Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. The hand or manner of writing.

I found the letter thrown in at the casement of my closet.—You know the character to be your brother's. Shaksp.

4. A representation of any man as to his personal qualities.

Each drew fair characters, yet none
Of these they feign'd excels their own. Denham.

Homer has excelled all the heroick poets that ever wrote, in the multitude and variety of his characters; every god that is admitted into his poem, acts a part which would have been suitable to no other deity.
Addison.

5. An account of any thing as good or bad.

This subterraneous passage is much mended since Seneca gave so bad a character of it Add. on Italy.

6. The person with his assemblage of qualities; a personage.

In a tragedy, or epick poem, the hero of the piece must be advanced foremost to the view of the reader or spectator; he must outshine the rest of all the characters; he must appear the prince of them, like the sun in the Copernican system, encompassed with the less noble planets. Dryden.

7. Personal qualities; particular constitution of the mind.

Nothing so true as what you once let fall,
Most women have no characters at all. Pope.

8. Adventitious qualities impressed by a post or office.

The chief honour of the magistrate consists in maintaining the dignity of his character by suitable actions. Atterbury

To CHA'RACTER, kâr'-âk-tûr. v. a. [from the noun.] To inscribe; to engrave. It seems to have had the accent formerly on the second syllable.

These few precepts in thy memory
See thou character. Shaksp.

Shew me one scar character'd on thy skin. Shak.

O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character. Shak.

The pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage,
Character'd in the face. Milton.

CHARACTERI'STICAL, kâr-âk-tê-rîs'-tê-kâl. adj. [from characterize.] That which constitutes the character, or marks the peculiar properties, of any person or thing.

There are several others that I take to have been likewise such, to which yet I have not ventured to prefix that characteristick distinction.
Woodward on Fossils.

The shining quality of an epick hero, his magnanimity, his constancy, his patience, his piety, or whatever characteristical virtue his poet gives him, raises our admiration. Dryden.

CHARACTERISTI'CALNESS, kâr-âk-tê-ris'-tê-kâl-nês. n. s. [from characteristical.] The quality of being peculiar to a character; marking a character.

CHARACTERI'STICK, kâr-âk-tê-ris'-tîk.[509] n. s. That which constitutes the character; that which distinguishes any thing or person from others.

This vast invention exerts itself in Homer, in a manner superiour to that of any poet; it is the great and peculiar characteristick which distinguishes him from all others. Pope.

CHARACTERI'STICK of a Logarithm, kâr-âk-tê-rîs'-tîk. The same with the index or exponent.

To CHA'RACTERIZE, kâr'-âk-tê-rize. v. a. [from character.]

1. To give a character or an account of the personal qualities of any man.

It is some commendation, that we have avoided publickly to characterize any person without long experience. Swift.

2. To engrave, or imprint

They may be called anticipations, prenotions, or sentiments characterized and engraven in the soul, born with it, and growing up with it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. To mark with a particular stamp or token.

There are faces not only individual, but gentilitious and national; European, Asiatick, Chinese, African, and Grecian faces are characterized. Arbuthnot on Air.

CHA'RACTERLESS, kâr'âk-tûr-lês. adj. [from character.] Without a character.

When water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakspeare.

CHA'RACTERY, kâr'âk-tûr-rê. n. s. [from character.] Impression; mark; distinction: accented anciently on the second syllable.

Fairies use flowers for their charactery. Shaksp.
All my engagements I will construe to thee,
All the charactery of my sad brows. Shaksp.

CHA'RCOAL, tshâr'kôle. n. s. [imagined by Skinner to be derived from char business; but, by Mr. Lye, from To chark, to burn.] Coal made by burning wood under turf. It is used in preparing metals.

Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal; and charcoal of roots, being coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Love is a fire which burns and sparkles
In men as nat'rally as in charcoals,
Which sooty chymists stop in holes,
When out of wood they extract coals. Hudibras.

Is there who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls
With desp'rate charcoal round his darken'd walls?
Pope.

CHARD, tshârd. n. s. [charde, French.]

1. Chards of artichokes, are the leaves of fair artichoke plants, tied and wrapped up all over but the top, in straw, during the autumn and winter; this makes them grow white, and lose some of their bitterness. Chambers.

2. Chards of beet, are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large, white, thick, downy; and cotton-like main shoot, which is the true chard. Mortimer.

To CHARGE, tshârje. v. a. [charger, Fr. caricare, Ital. from carrus, Lat.]

1. To entrust; to commission for a certain purpose; it has with before the thing entrusted.

And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them. Genesis.
What you have charged me with, that I have done Shaksp.

2. To impute as a debt: with on before the debtor.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon:
That's somewhat sure; a mighty sum of murder,
Of innocent and kindred blood struck off:
My prayers and penance shall discount for these,
And beg of Heav'n to charge the bill on me. Dryden.

3. To impute: with on before the person to whom any thing is imputed.

No more accuse thy pen, but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time. Dryden.
It is easy to account for the difficulties he charges on the peripatetick doctrine. Locke.
It is not barely the ploughman's pains; the reaper's and thresher's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat; the plough, mill, oven, or any other utensils, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.
Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,
And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.
We charge that upon necessity, which was really desired and chosen. Watts's Logick.

4. To impute to, as cost or hazard.

He was so great an encourager of commerce, that he charged himself with all the sea risk of such vessels as carried corn to Rome in winter. Arbuthnot on Coins.

5. To impose as a task; it has with before the thing imposed.

The gospel chargeth us with piety towards God, and justice and charity to men, and temperance and chastity in reference to ourselves. Tillotson.

6. To accuse; to censure.

Speaking thus to you, I am so far from charging you as guilty in this matter, that I can sincerely say, I believe the exhortation wholly needless. Wake's Preparation for Death.

7. To accuse: it has with before the crime.

And his angels he charged with folly. Job.

8. To challenge.

The priest shall charge her by an oath. Numbers.
Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer as the pope. Shaksp.

9. To command; to enjoin.

I may not suffer you to visit them;
The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary. Shak.
Why dost thou turn thy face? I charge thee, answer
To what I shall enquire. Dryden.
I charge thee, stand,
And tell thy name, and business in the land. Dryd.

10. To fall upon; to attack.

With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm. Shakspeare.
The Grecians rally, and their powers unite;
With fury charge us, and renew the fight. Dryd.

11. To burden; to load.

Here is the smell of blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh! oh! oh!——What a sigh is there! the heart is sorely charged. Shaksp.
When often urg'd, unwilling to be great,
Your country calls you from your lov'd retreat,
And sends to senates, charg'd with common care,
Which none more shuns, and none can better bear. Dryden.
Meat swallowed down for pleasure and greediness, only charges the stomach, or fumes into the brain. Temple.
A fault in the ordinary method of education, is the charging of children's memories with rules and precepts. Locke.
The brief with weighty crimes was charg'd,
On which the pleader much enlarg'd. Swift.

12. To cover with something adventitious.

It is pity the obelisks in Rome had not been charged with several parts of the Egyptian histories, instead of hieroglyphicks. Addison on Italy.

13. To fix, as for fight. Obsolete.

He rode up and down, gallantly mounted, and charged and discharged his lance. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

14. To load a gun with powder and bullets.

To CHARGE, tsârje. v. n. To make an onset.

Like your heroes of antiquity, he charges in iron, and seems to despise all ornament but intrinsick merit. Granville.

CHARGE, tsârje. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Care; custody; trust to defend.

A hard division, when the harmless sheep
Must leave their lambs to hungry wolves in charge. Fairfax.
He enquired many things, as well concerning the princes which had the charge of the city, whether they were in hope to defend the same. Knolles's History of the Turks.

2. Precept; mandate; command.

Saul might even lawfully have offered to God those reserved spoils, had not the Lord, in that particular case, given special charge to the contrary. Hooker.
It is not for nothing, that St. Paul giveth charge to beware of philosophy; that is to say, such knowledge as men by natural reason attain unto. Hooker.
One of the Turks laid down letters upon a stone, saying, that in them was contained that they had in charge. Knolles.
The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak. Shak.
He, who requires
From us no other service than to keep
This one, this easy charge; of all the trees
In Paradise, that bear delicious fruit
So various, not to taste that only tree
Of knowledge, planted by the tree of life. Milton.

3. Commission; trust conferred; office.

If large possessions, pompous titles, honourable charges, and profitable commissions, could have made this proud man happy, there would have been nothing wanting. L'Estrange.
Go first the master of thy herds to find,
True to his charge, a loyal swain and kind. Pope.

4. It had anciently sometimes over before the thing committed to trust.

I gave my brother charge over Jerusalem; for he was a faithful man, and feared God above many. Nehemiah.

5. It has of before the subject of command or trust.

Hast thou eaten of the tree,

Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure.
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known. Milton.

2. Goodwill; benevolence; disposition to think well of others.

My errours, I hope, are only those of charity to mankind; and such as my own charity has caused me to commit, that of others may more easily excuse. Dryden.

3. The theological virtue of universal love.

Concerning charity, the final object whereof is that incomprehensible beauty which shineth in the countenance of Christ, the Son of the living God. Hooker.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.—
—Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt. Shaksp.

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love
By name to come call'd charity, the soul
Of all the rest. Milton.

Faith believes the revelations of God; hope expects his promises; charity loves his excellencies and mercies. Taylor.

But lasting charity's more ample sway,
Nor bound by time, nor subject to decay,
In happy triumph shall for ever live. Prior.

Charity, or a love of God, which works by a love of our neighbour, is greater than faith or hope. Atterbury.

4. Liberality to the poor.

The heathen poet, in commending the charity of Dido to the Trojans, spoke like a christian. Dryd.

5. Alms; relief given to the poor.

We must incline to the king; I will look for him, and privily relieve him; go you and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived. Shakspeare.

The ant did well to reprove the grasshopper for her slothfulness; but she did ill then to refuse her a charity in her distress. L'Estrange.

I never had the confidence to beg a charity. Dryden.

To CHARK, tshårk. v. a. To burn to a black cinder, as wood is burned to make charcoal.

Excess either with an apoplexy knocks a man on the head, or with a fever, like fire in a strong-water shop, burns him down to the ground; or, if it flames not out, charks him to a coal. Grew.

CHA'RLATAN, shår'lâ-tân. n. s. [charlatan, Fr. ciarlatano, Ital. from ciarlare to chatter.] A quack; a mountebank; an empirick.

CHARM, tshårm. n. s. [charme Fr. carmen, Latin.]

1. Words, or philtres, or characters, imagined to have some occult or unintelligible power.

I never knew a woman so dote upon a man; surely I think you have charms.——Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms. Shakspeare.

There have been used, either barbarous words, of no sense, lest they should disturb the imagination; or words of similitude, that may second and feed the imagination: and this was ever as well in heathen charms, as in charms of later times. Bacon.

Alcyone he names amidst his pray'rs,
Names as a charm against the waves and wind,
Most in his mouth, and ever in his mind. Dryden.

Antæus could, by magick charms,
Recover strength whene'er he fell. Swift.

2. Something of power to subdue opposition, and gain the affections; something that can please irresistibly.

Well sounding verses are the charms we use,
Heroick thoughts and virtue to infuse. Roscommon.

Nor ever hope the queen of love
Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve. Prior.

To fam'd Apelles when young Amnon brought
The darling idol of his captive heart;
And the pleas'd nymph with kind attention sat,
To have her charms recorded by his art. Waller.

But what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her bloomy mountains, and her sunny shores,
With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,
While proud oppression in her vallies reigns,
And tyranny usurps her happy plains? Addison.

To CHARM, tshårm. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fortify with charms against evil.

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born. Shakspeare.

2. To fortify with charms against evil.

3. To summon by incantation.

Upon my knees
I charm you by my once commended beauty,
By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one. Shaksp.

4. To subdue by some secret power; to amaze; to overpower.

I, in mine own woe charm'd,
Could not find death, where I did hear him groan;
Nor feel him where he struck. Shaksp.

Musick the fiercest grief can charm. Pope.

5. To subdue the mind by pleasure.

'Tis your graces
That from my mutest conscience to my tongue
Charms this report out. Shakspeare.

Amoret! my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength doth lie:
Where the pow'r that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye? Waller

Charm by accepting, by submitting sway. Pope.

Chloe thus the soul alarm'd,
Aw'd without sense, and without beauty charm'd. Pope.

CHA'RMED, tshårm'd. adj. Enchanted.

Arcadia was the charmed circle, where all his spirits for ever should be enchanted. Sidney.

We implore thy powerful hand,

If charnel-houses and our graves must send
Those that we bury, back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. Shaksp.

When they were in those charnel-houses, every one was placed in order, and a black pillar or coffin set by him. Taylor

CHART, tshårt. n. s. [charta, Lat.] A delineation or map of coasts, for the use of sailors. It is distinguished from a map, by representing only the coasts.

The Portuguese, when they had doubled the Cape of Good Hope, found skilful pilots, using astronomical instruments, geographical charts, and compasses. Arbuthnot.

CHA'RTER, tshår'tûr. [n. s. charta, Lat.]

1. A charter is a written evidence of things done between man and man. Charters are divided into charters of the king, and charters of private persons. Charters of the king are those, whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or more, or to any body politick: as a charter of exemption, that no man shall be empannelled on a jury; charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence. Cowell.

2. Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.

If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shaksp.

It is not to be wondered, that the great charter whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being as brief in word as large in effect, hath bred much quarrel of interpretation. Raleigh's Essays.

Here was that charter seal'd, wherein the crown
All marks of arbitrary power lays down. Denham.

She shakes the rubbish from her mounting brow,
And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,
Which heav'n will to the death of time allow. Dryden.

God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures. South.

3. Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty,
Withal as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;
And they that are most galled with my folly,
They most must laugh. Shakspeare.

My mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. Shakspeare.

CHA'RTER-PARTY, tshår'tûr-pår-tê. n. s. [chartre partie, Fr.] A paper relating to a contract, of which each party has a copy.

Charter-parties, or contracts, made even upon the high sea, touching things that are not in their own nature maritime, belong not to the admiral's jurisdiction. Hale.

CHA'RTERED, tshår'tûrd.[359] adj. [from charter.] Invested with privileges by charter; privileged.

When he speaks
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still. Shaksp.

CHA'RY, tshâ'rê. adj. [from care.] Careful; cautious; wary; frugal.

Over his kindred he held a wary and chary care, which bountifully was expressed, when occasion so required. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The chariest maid is prodigal enough
If she unmask her beauty to the moon. Shaksp.

To CHASE, tshâse. v. a. [chasser, Fr.]

He that chaseth away his mother, is a son that causeth shame. Proverbs.

4. To follow as a thing desirable.

5. To drive.

Thus chased by their brother's endless malice from prince to prince, and from place to place, they, for their safety, fled at last to the city of Bisennis. Knolles's History of the Turks.

When the following morn had chas'd away
The flying stars, and light restor'd the day. Dryden.

To chase Metals. See To ENCHASE.

CHASE, tshâse. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; as the pleasures of the chase.

2. Pursuit of any thing as game.

Whilst he was hast'ning in the chase, it seems,
Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady. Shakspeare.

There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to the other, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Fitness to be hunted; appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shakspeare.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;
Oh! let me still that spotless name retain,
Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey,
And only make the beasts of chase my prey. Dryden.

4. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them chase. Bacon.

He sallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedy execution. Knolles's History of the Turks.

They seek that joy, which us'd to glow
Expanded on the hero's face,
When the thick squadrons prest the foe,
And William led the glorious chase. Prior.

5. Pursuit of something as desirable.

Yet this mad chase of fame, by few pursued,
Has drawn destruction on the multitude. Dryden.

6. The game hunted,

She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase went circling about, rising so with the less sense of rising. Sidney

Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chase,
For I myself must put this deer to death. Shaksp

Honour's the noblest chase, pursue that game,
And recompense the loss of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not endued with so many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with a greater diversity of game than a park A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot; and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers. Cowell.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase. Shaksp.

8. The Chase of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken withinside. Chambers.

CHASE-GUN, tshâse'gŭn. n. s. [from chase and gun.] Guns in the forepart of the ship, fired upon those that are pursued.

Mean time the Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our stern they send. Dryden.

CHA'SER, tshâ'sûr. n. s. [from chase.]

1. Hunter; pursuer; driver.

Then began
A stop i' the chaser, a retire; anon
A rout, confusion thick. Shakspeare.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye
Hast lost the chasers, and his ear the cry. Denham.

Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey,
At once the chaser, and at once the prey!
Lo, Rufus, tugging at the deadly dart,
Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart! Pope.

2. An enchaser.

CHASM, kâzm.[383] n. s. [χάσμα.]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gap; an opening.

In all that visible corporeal world, we see no chasms or gaps. Locke.

The water of this orb communicates with that of the ocean, by means of certain hiatuses or chasms passing betwixt it and the bottom of the ocean. Woodward.

The ground adust her riv'n mouth disparts,
Horrible chasm! profound. Philips.

2. A place unfilled; a vacuity.

Some lazy ages, lost in ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles;
Such, whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

CHA'SSELAS, shâs'sè-lâs. n. s. [French.] A sort of grape.

CHASTE, tshâste. adj. [chaste, Fr. castus, Lat.]

CHA'STELY, tshâste'lè. adv. [from chaste.] Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You should not pass here; no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely. Shakspeare.

Make first a song of joy and love,
Which chastely flame in royal eyes. Wotton.

Succession of a long descent,
Which chastely in the channels ran,
And from our demi-gods began. Dryden.

To CHA'STEN, tshâse'tn.[405] v. a. [chastier, Fr. castigo, Lat.] To correct; to punish; to mortify.

Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying. Proverbs.

I follow thee, safe guide! the path
Thou lead'st me; and to the hand of heav'n submit,
However chast'ning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Some feel the rod,
And own, like us, the father's chast'ning hand. Rowe.

From our lost pursuit she wills to hide
Her close decrees, and chasten human pride. Prior.

To CHASTI'SE, tshâs-tize'. v. a. [castigo, Lat. anciently accented on the first syllable, now on the last.]

1. To punish; to correct by punishment; to afflict for faults.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet. Shakspeare.

I am glad to see the vanity or envy of the canting chymists thus discovered and chastised. Boyle.

Seldom is the world affrighted or chastised with signs or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Like you, commission'd to chastise and bless,
He must avenge the world, and give it peace. Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience; to repress; to restrain; to awe.

Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirit in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shakspeare.

Know, Sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court,
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shakspeare.

The gay social sense
By decency chastis'd. Thomson.

CHASTI'SEMENT, tshâs'tîz-mênt. n. s. [chastiment, Fr.] Correction; punishment; commonly, though not always used of domestick or parental punishment.

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement? Shaksp.

He held the chastisement of one, which molested the see of Rome, pleasing to God. Raleigh's Essays.

For seven years what can a child be guilty of, but lying, or ill-natured tricks? the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod. Locke.

He receives a fit of sickness as the kind chastisement and discipline of his heavenly Father, to wean his affections from the world. Bentley.

CHASTI'SER, tshâs-ti'zûr. n. s. [from chastise.] The person that chastises; a punisher; a corrector.

To CHAT, tshât. v. n. [from caquetur, Fr. Skinner; perhaps from achat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.] To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their steads,
Ylike as a monster of many heads Spenser.

Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your sauciness will jest upon my love. Shakspeare.

The shepherds on the lawn
Sat simply chatting in a rustick row. Milton.

With much good-will the motion was em[illegible]'d,
To chat a while on their adventures pass'd. Dryden.

To CHAT, tshât. v. a. To talk of. Not in use, unless ludicrously.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him. Your prattling nurse

Into a rapture lets her baby cry,
While she chats him. Shakspeare.

CHAT, tshât. n. s. [from the verb.] Idle talk; prate; slight or negligent tattle.

Lords, that can prate
As amply and unnecessarily
As this Gonzalo, I myself would make
A chough of as deep chat. Shakspeare.

The time between before the fire they sat,
And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat. Dryden.

The least is good, far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat, of a soaking club. Locke.

Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that. Pope.

CHAT, tshât. n. s. The keys of trees are called chats; as, ash chats.

CHA'TELLANY, shât'tél-lén-è. n. s. [chatellenie, Fr.] The district under the dominion of a castle.

For the ingredients of our cauldron. Shakspeare.

CHEAP, tshêpe. adj. [ceapan, Sax. koopen, Dutch, to buy.]

1. To be had at a low rate; purchased for a small price.

Where there are a great many sellers to a few buyers, there the thing to be sold will be cheap. On the other side, raise up a great many buyers for a few sellers, and the same thing will immediately turn dear. Locke.

2. Of small value; easy to be had; not respected.

The goodness, that is cheap in beauty, makes beauty brief in goodness. Shakspeare.

Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company. Shakspeare.

He that is too much in any thing, so that he giveth another occasion of society, maketh himself cheap. Bacon.

May your sick fame still languish till it die,
And you grow cheap in every subject's eye. Dryden.

The titles of distinction, which belong to us, are turned into terms of derision, and every way is taken, by profane men, towards rendering us cheap and contemptible. Atterbury.

CHEAP, tshêpe. n. s. [cheping is an old word for market; whence Eastcheap, Cheapside.] Market; purchase; bargain; as good cheap; à bon marche, Fr.

The same wine which we pay so dear for now-a-days, in that good world was very good cheap. Sidney.

It is many a man's case to tire himself out with hunting, after that abroad, which he carries about him all the while, and may have it better cheap at home. L'Estrange.

Some few insulting cowards, who love to vapour good cheap, may trample on those who give the least resistance. Decay of Piety.

To CHE'APEN, tshè'pn.[103] v. a. [ceapan, Sax. to buy.]

1. To attempt to purchase; to bid for any thing; to ask the price of any commodity.

Rich she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her. Shaksp.

The first he cheapened was a Jupiter, which would have come at a very easy rate. L'Estrange.

She slipt sometimes to Mrs. Thody's,
To cheapen tea. Prior.

To shops in crowds the daggled females fly,
Pretend to cheapen goods, but nothing buy. Swift.

2. To lessen value.

My hopes pursue a brighter diadem,
Can any brighter than the Roman be?
I find my proffer'd love has cheapen'd me. Dryden.

CHE'APLY, tshèpe'lè. adv. [from cheap.] At a small price; at a low rate.

By these I see
So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shaksp.

Blood, rapine, massacres, were cheaply bought,
So mighty recompence your beauty brought. Dryden.

CHE'APNESS, tshèpe'nès. n. s. [from cheap.] Lowness of price.

Ancient statutes incite merchant-strangers to bring in commodities; having for end cheapness. Bacon.

The discredit which has grown upon Ireland, has been the great discouragement to other nations to transplant themselves hither, and prevailed farther than all the invitations which the cheapness and plenty of the country has made them. Temple.

CHEAR, tshèèr. See CHEER.

To CHEAT, tshête. v. a. [of uncertain derivation, probably from acheter, Fr. to purchase, alluding to the tricks used in making bargains. See the noun.]

1. To defraud; to impose upon; to trick. It is used commonly of low cunning.

It is a dangerous commerce, where an honest man is sure at first of being cheated; and he recovers not his losses, but by learning to cheat others. Dryden.

There are people who find that the most effectual way to cheat the people, is always to pretend to infallible cures. Tillotson.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

I that am curtail'd of man's fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd. Shakspeare.

CHEAT, tshête. n. s. [from the verb. Some think abbreviated from escheat, because many fraudulent measures being taken by the lords of manours in procuring escheats, cheat, the abridgment, was brought to convey a bad meaning.]

1. A fraud; a trick; an imposture.

The pretence of publick good, is a cheat that will ever pass, though so abused by ill men, that I wonder the good do not grow ashamed to use it. Temple.

Empirick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat. Dryden.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
Yet, fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit:
Trust on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lyes worse; and while it says we shall be blest
With some new joy, cuts off what we possest. Dryd.

2. A person guilty of fraud.

Dissimulation can be no further useful than it is concealed; for as much as no man will trust a known cheat. South.

Like that notorious cheat, vast sums I give,
Only that you may keep me while I live. Dryden.

CHE'ATER, tshè'tûr.[95] n. s. [from cheat.] One that practises fraud.

I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. [It is here for escheater.] Shaksp.

They say this town is full of couzenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye;
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakspeare.

He is no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater i' faith.—Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater. Shakspeare.

All sorts of in urious persons, the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, cheaters of men's inheritances, false witnesses and accusers. Taylor.

To CHECK, tshèk. v. a. [from the French echecs chess; from whence we use, at that game, the term checkmate, when we stop our adversary from carrying on his play any further.]

1. To repress; to curb.

Reserve thy state; with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shakspeare.

Fames may be sown and raised, they may be spread and multiplied, they may be checked and laid dead. Bacon.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton.

He who sat at a table, richly and deliciously furnished, but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite. South.

2. To reprove; to chide.

Richard, with his eye brimful of tears,
Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,
Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy.

Clarendon.

Some free from rhyme or reason, rule or check,
Break Priscian's head, and Pegasus's neck. Pope.

While such men are in trust, who have no check from within, nor any views but towards their interest. Swift.

3. A reproof; a slight.

Oh! this life
Is nobler than attending for a check. Shakspeare.

I do know, the state,
However this may gall him with some check,
Cannot with safety cast him. Shakspeare.

4. A dislike; a sudden disgust; something that stops the progress.

Say I should wed her, would not my wise subjects
Take check, and think it strange? perhaps revolt?
Dryden.

5. In falconry, when a hawk forsakes her proper game to follow rooks, pies, or other birds that cross her flight.
Chambers.

A young woman is a hawk upon her wings; and if she be handsome, she is the more subject to go out on check. Suckling.

When whistled from the fist
Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd,
Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind.
Dryden.

6. The person checking; the cause of restraint; a stop.

He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry. Clarendon.

CHE'RUB, tshêr'ûb. n. s. [כרב plur. כרבים] It is sometimes written in the plural, improperly, cherubims.] A celestial spirit; which, in the hierarchy, is placed next in order to the seraphim. All the several descriptions which the Scripture gives us of cherubim, differ from one another; as they are described in the shapes of men, eagles, oxen, lions, and in a composition of all these figures put together. The hieroglyphical representations in the embroidery upon the curtains of the tabernacle, were called by Moses, Exod. xxvi. 1. cherubim of cunning work. Calmet.

The roof o' th' chamber
With gold cherubims is fretted. Shakspeare.

Heav'n's cherubim, hors'd
Upon the sightless coursers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in ev'ry eye,
That tears shall drown the wind. Shakspeare.

Some cherub finishes what you begun,
And to a miracle improves the tune. Prior.

CHERU'BICK, tshê-rû'bîk. adj. [from cherub.] Angelick; relating to the cherubim.

Thy words
Attentive, and with more delighted ear,
Divine instructor! I have heard, than when
Cherubick songs by night from neighb'ring hills
Aerial musick send. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And on the east side of the garden place
Cherubick watch. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CHE'RUBIN, tshêr'û-bîm. adj. [from cherub.] Angelical.

This fell whore of thine
Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look. Shakspeare.

CHE'RVIL, tshêr'vîl. n. s. [chærophyllum, Lat.] An umbelliferous plant. Miller.

To CHE'RUP, tshêr'ûp. v. n. [from cheer; perhaps from cheer up, corrupted to cherup.] To chirp; to use a cheerful voice.

The birds
Frame to thy song their cheerful cheruping;
Or hold their peace for shame of thy sweet lays.
Spenser.

CHE'SLIP, tshês'slîp. n. s. A small vermin, that lies under stones or tiles.
Skinner.

CHESS, tshês, n. s. [echecs, Fr.] A nice and abtruse game, in which two sets of men are moved in opposition to each other.

This game the Persian magi did invent,
The force of Eastern wisdom to express:
From thence to busy Europeans sent,
And styl'd by modern Lombards pensive chess.
Denham.

So have I seen a king on chess
(His rooks and knights withdrawn,
His queen and bishops in distress)
Shifting about, grow less and less,
With here and there a pawn. Dryden.

CHE'SS-APPLE, tshês âp-pl. n. s. A species of Wild Service.

CHE'SS-BOARD, tshês'bôrd. n. s. [from chess and board.] The board or table on which the game of chess is played.

To ease the pain of coward thought. Prior.

CHE'SS-MAN, tshês'mân.[88] n. s. [from chess and man.] A puppet for chess.

A company of chess-men standing on the same squares of the chess-board where we left them, we say they are all in the same place, or unmoved. Locke.

CHE'SS-PLAYER, tshês'plâ'ûr.[98] n. s. [from chess and player.] A gamester at chess.

Thus, like a skilful chess-player, he draws out his men, and makes his pawns of use to his greater persons. Dryden.

CHE'SSOM, tshês'sûm.[166] n. s. Mellow earth.

The tender chessom and mellow earth is the best, being mere mould, between the two extremes of clay and sand; especially if it be not loomy and binding. Bacon's Natural History.

CHEST, tshêst. n. s. [cyſt, Sax, cista, Lat.]

1. A box of wood, or other materials in which things are laid up.

He will seek there, on my word: neither press, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of all such places. Shakspeare.

But more have been by avarice opprest,
And heaps of money crowded in the chest. Dryden.

2. A chest of drawers. A case with moveable boxes or drawers.

3. The trunk of the body, or cavity from the shoulders to the belly.

Such as have round faces, or broad chests, or shoulders, have seldom or never long necks. Brown.

He describes another by the largeness of his chest, and breadth of his shoulders. Pope.

CHE'STNUT, tshês'nût. } n. s.
CHE'STNUT-TREE, tshês'nût-trêê. }
[chastaigne, Fr. castanea, Lat.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering. This tree was formerly in greater plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber. Miller.

2. The fruit of the chestnut tree.

A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakspeare.

October has a basket of services, medlars, and chestnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacham on Drawing.

3. The name of a brown colour.

His hair is of a good colour.——
——An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour. Shakspeare.

Merab's long hair was glossy chestnut brown.
Cowley.

CHE'STON, tshês'tn. n. s. A species of plum.

CHEVALIER, shêv-â-lêêr.[352] n. s. [chevalier, Fr.] A knight; a gallant strong man.

Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;
And I am lowted by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakspeare.

CHE'VAUX de Frise, shêv-ô-dê-frêêze.[352] n. s. [Fr. The singular Cheval de Frise is seldom used.] The Friesland horse, which is a piece of timber, larger or smaller, and traversed with wooden spikes, pointed with iron, five or six feet long; used in defending a passage, stopping a breach, or making a retrenchment to stop the cavalry. It is also, called a turnpike, or tourniquet. Chambers.

CHE'VEN, tshêv'vn.[103] n. s. [chevesne, Fr.] A river fish, the same with chub.

CHE'VERIL, tshêv'êr-îl. n. s. [cheverau, Fr.] A kid; kidleather. Obsolete.

A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward. Shakspeare.

Which gifts the capacity
Of your soft cheveril consicience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakspeare.

O, here's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad. Shakspeare.

CHE'VISANCE, shêv'ê-zânse. n. s. [chevisance, Fr.] Enterprise; achievement.

A word now not in use,
Fortune the foe of famous chevisance,
Seldom, said Guyon, yields to virtue aid. Spenser.

CHE'VRON shêv'rôn. n. s. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house set up as they ought to stand.
Harris.

To CHEW, tshôô. v. a. [ceopȳan, Sax. kauwen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appear before us? Shakspeare.

Pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy. Shaksp.

This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,
Nor chew'd the flesh, of lambs. Dryden's Fables.

The vales
Descending gently, where the lowing herd
Chews veru'rous pasture. Philips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate; to ruminate in the thoughts.

While the fierce monk does at his trial stand,
He chews revenge, abjuring his offence:
Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,
He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence. Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heaven 's in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew its name Shakspeare.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with attention. Bacon.

To CHEW, tshôô. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shaksp.

Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon 't. L'Estrange.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

CHICA'NE, shė-kâne'.[352] n. s. [chicane, Fr. derived by Menage from the Spanish word chico little.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private cases, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke.

His attornies have hardly one trick left; they are at the end of all their chicane. Arbuthnot.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,
He strove to lengthen the campaign,
And save his forces by chicane. Prior.

To CHICA'NE, shė-kâne'. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

CHICA'NER, shė-kâ'nûr. n. s. [chicaneur, Fr.] A petty sophister; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

This is the way to distinguish the two most different things I know, a logical chicaner from a man of reason. Locke.

CHICA'NERY, shė-kâ'nûr-ė. n. s. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry; mean arts of wrangle.

His anger caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve such as discovered most of the chicanery and futility of the practice. Arbuthnot.

CHICHES, tshîtsh'ėz. n. s. See CHICKPEAS.

CHI'CHLING VETCH, tshîtsh'lîng-vėtsh. n. s. [lathyrus, Lat.] In Germany they are cultivated and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted Miller.

CHICK, tshîk. } n. s. [cicen, Sax.
CHI'CKEN, thîk'în.[104] } kiecken, Dutch.

Chicken is, I believe, the old plural of chick, though now used as a singular noun.]

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.

All my pretty ones!
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop! Shakspeare.

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick. Davies.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor hath seen the motion, yet he readily practiseth it. Hale.

Even since she was a se'en-night old, they say,
Was chaste and humble to her dying day;
Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobey. Dryden.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,
Upon a chick and pint of wine:
On rainy days I dine alone,
And pick my chicken to the bone. Swift.

2. A word of tenderness.

My Ariel, chick,
This is thy charge. Shakspeare.

3. A term for a young girl.

Then, Chloe, still go on to prate
Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;
Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken. Swift.

CHI'CKENHEARTED, tshîk'în-hâr-tėd. adj. [from chicken and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,
Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chickenhearted,
To fright the ladies first, and then be parted.
Prologue to Spanish Friar.

CHI'CKENPOX, tshîk'în-pôks. n. s. An exanthematous distemper, so called from its being of no very great danger.

CHI'CKLING, tshîk'ling. n. s. [from chick.] A small chicken.

CHI'CKPEAS, tshîk'pėze. n. s. [from chick and pea.] A kind of degenerate pea. Miller.

CHI'CKWEED, tshîk'wėėd. n. s. [from chick and weed.] The name of a plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, are of good use in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk. Wiseman.

To CHIDE, tshide. v. a. preter. chid or chode, part. chid or chidden. [cıdan Sax.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words: applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth.
Shakspeare.

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove. Shaksp.

Those, that do teach your babes,
Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks;
He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding. Shakspeare.

Scylla wept,
And chid her barking waves into attention. Milton.

Above the waves as Neptune shew'd his face,
To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race.
Waller.

You look, as if yon stern philosopher
Had just now chid you. Addison.

If any woman of better fashion in the parish happened to be absent from church, they were sure of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her. Swift.

2. To drive with reproof.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
Have chid me from the battle. Shakspeare.

3. To blame; to reproach: applied to things.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay,
And fountains, o'er the pebbles, chid your stay.
Dryden.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haste;
For the work perfected, the joy was past. Prior.

To CHIDE, tshide. v. n.

1. To clamour; to scold.

What had he to do to chide at me? Shakspeare.

Next morn, betimes, the bride was missing:
The mother scream'd, the father chid,
Where can this idle wench be hid? Swift.

2. To quarrel with.

The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you. Shakspeare.

3. To make a noise.

My duty.
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours. Shakspeare.

CHI'DER, tshi'dûr.[98] n. s. [from chide.] A rebuker; a reprover.

Not her that chides, Sir, at thy hand I pray —
I love no chiders, Sir. Shakspeare.

CHIEF, tshėėf. adj. [chef the head, Fr.]

1. Principal; most eminent; above the rest in any respect.

These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's works. 1 Kings.

The hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this tresspass. Ezra.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;
At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend. Pope.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A froward man soweth strife, and a whisperer separateth chief friends. Proverbs.

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferiour, or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it. Locke.

4. It is used by some writers with a superlative termination; but, I think, improperly: the comparative chiefer is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain
Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son. Shaksp.

Doeg an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdsmen.
1. Samuel.

He sometimes denied admission to the chiefest officers of the army. Clarendon.

CHIEF, tshėėf.[375] n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A military commander; a leader of armies; a captain.

Is pain to them
Less pain, less to be fled? or thou than they
Less hardy to endure? courageous chief!
The first in flight from pain. Milton's Par. Lost.

After or before were never known
Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone. Dryden.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array;
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

2. In Chief, in law. In capite, by personal service.

All sums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

I shall be proud to hold my dependence on you in chief, as I do part of my small fortune in Wiltshire. Dryden.

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like achievement; a mark of distinction.

Where be the nosegays that she dight for thee?
The coloured chaplets wrought with a chief,
The knottish rush-rings, and gilt rosemary? Spens.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is so called from the French word chef, the head or upper part: this possesses the upper third part of the escutcheon. Peacham on Drawing.

CHI'EFDOM, tshėėf'dûm. n. s. [from chief.] Sovereignty. Not in use.

Zephyrus being in love with Chloris, and coveting her to wife, gave her for a dowry the chiefdom and sovereignty of all flowers and green herbs. Spenser's Kal. Gloss.

CHIE'FLESS, tshėėf'lės. adj. [from chief.] Wanting a head; being without a leader.

And chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign,
And navies yawn'd for orders on the main. Pope.

CHI'EFLY, tshėėf'lė. adv. [from chief.] Principally; eminently: more than common.

Any man who will consider the nature of an epic poem, what actions it describes, and what persons they are chiefly whom it informs, will find it a work full of difficulty. Dryden.

Those parts of the kingdom, where the number and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay. Swift.

CHI'EFRIE, tshēē'frē. n. s. [from chief.] A small rent paid to the lord paramount.

They shall be well able to live upon those lands, to yield her majesty reasonable chiefrie, and also give a competent maintenance unto the garrisons. Spenser's Ireland.

Would the reserved rent at this day be any more than a small chiefrie? Swift.

CHI'EFTAIN, tshēē'tĭn.[208] n. s. [from chief captain.]

1. A leader; a commander.

That forc'd their chieftain, for his safety's sake, (Their chieftain Humber named was aright) Unto the mighty stream him to betake, Where he an end of battle and of life did make. Fairy Queen.

It broke and absolutely subdued all the lords and chieftains of the Irishry. Davies on Ireland.

CHIE'VANCE, tshēē'vânse. n. s. [probably from achevance, Fr. purchase.] Traffick, in which money is extorted; as discount. Now obsolete.

There were good laws against usury, the bastard use of money; and against unlawful chievances and exchanges, which is bastard usury. Bacon.

CHI'LBLAIN, tshĭl'blâne. n. s. [from chill cold, and blain; so that Temple seems mistaken in his etymology, or has written it wrong to serve a purpose.] Sores made by frost.

I remembered the cure of chilblains when I was a boy (which may be called the children's gout), by burning at the fire. Temple.

CHILD, tshild. n. s. in the plural CHILDREN, [cild, Sax.]

1. An infant, or very young person.

In age, to wish for youth is full as vain, As for a youth to turn a child again. Denham.

We should no more be kinder to one child than to another, than we are tender of one eye more than of the other. L'Estrange.

The young lad must not be ventured abroad at eight or ten, for fear of what may happen to the tender child; though he then runs ten times less risque than at sixteen. Locke.

The stroke of death is nothing: children endure it, and the greatest cowards find it no pain. Wake.

2. One in the line of filiation, opposed to the parent.

Where children have been exposed, or taken away young, and afterwards have approached to their parents' presence, the parents, though they have not known them, have had a secret joy, or other alteration, thereupon. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

I shall see The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shakspeare.

So unexhausted her perfections were, That for more children she had more to spare. Dryd.

He, in a fruitful wife's embraces old, A long increase of children's children told. Addison.

3. The descendants of a man, how remote soever, are called children; as the children of Edom, the children of Israel.

4. In the language of scripture.

One weak in knowledge. Isaiah. 1 Corinthians.

Such as are young in grace. 1 John.

CHI'LDISHNESS, tshild'ĭsh-nĕs. n. s. [from childish.]

1. Puerility; triflingness.

The actions of childishness, and unfashionable carriage, time and age will of itself be sure to reform. Locke.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the superstition, credulity, and childishness of the Roman catholick religion. Addison on Italy.

2. Harmlessness.

Speak thou, boy; Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons. Shakspeare.

CHI'LDLESS, tshild'lĕs. adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. 1 Samuel.

A man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed; so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity. Bacon.

Childless thou art, childless remain: so death Shall be deceiv'd his glut. Milton's Paradise Lost.

She can give the reason why one died childless. Spectator.

CHI'LDLIKE, tshild'like. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or beseeming a child.

Who can owe no less than a childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care. Hooker.

I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her childlike duty. Shakspeare.

CHI'LIAD, kîl-ê-âd. n. s. [from χιλιας.] A thousand; a collection or sum containing a thousand.

We make cycles and periods of years, as decads, centuries, chiliads, for the use of computation in history. Holder.

CHILIA'EDRON, kîl-ê-â-êd'drôn. n.s. [from χιλια.] A figure of a thousand sides.

In a man, who speaks of a chiliaedron, or a body of a thousand sides, the idea of the figure may be very confused, though that of the number be very distinct. Locke.

CHILIFA'CTIVE, kîl-ê-fâk'tîv. adj. [from chile.] That which makes chile.

Whether this be not effected by some way of corrosion, rather than any proper digestion, chilifactive mutation, or alimental conversion. Brown.

CHILIFA'CTORY, kîl-ê-fâk'tô-rê. adj. [from chile.] That which has the quality of making chile.

We should rather rely upon a chilifactory menstruum, or digestive preparation drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICA'TION, kîl-ê-fê-kâ'shûn. n. s. [from chile.] The act of making chile.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the ostriche; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendence to chilification, by the power of natural heat. Brown.

CHILL, tshîl. adj. [cele, Sax.]

1. Cold; that which is cold to the touch.

And all my plants I save from nightly ill,
Of noisome winds, and blasting vapours chill. Milton.

2. Cold; having the sensation of cold; shivering with cold.

My heart and my chill veins freeze with despair. Rowe.

3. Dull; not warm; not forward: as, a chill reception.

4. Depressed; dejected; discouraged.

5. Unaffectionate; cold of temper.

CHILL, tshîl. n. s. [from the adjective.] Chilness; cold.

I very well know one to have a sort of chill about his præcordia and head. Derham's Physico-Theology.

To CHILL, tshîl. v.a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.

Age has not yet
So shrunk my sinews, or so chill'd my veins,
But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dryden.

Heat burns his rise, frost chills his setting beams,
And vex the world with opposite extremes. Creech.

Each changing season does its poison bring;
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring. Prior.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

2. To depress; to deject; to discourage.

Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his spirits, and awakens terrors which he cannot bear. Rogers.

3. To blast with cold.

The fruits perish on the ground,
Or soon decay, by snows immod'rate chill'd,
By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd. Blackmore.

CHI'LLINESS, tshîl'lê-nês. n. s. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.

If the patient survives three days, the acuteness of the pain abates, and a chilliness or shivering affects the body. Arbuthnot.

CHI'LLY, tshîl'lê. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.

A chilly sweat bedews
My shudd'ring limbs. Philips.

CHI'LNESS, tshîl'nês. n. s. [from chill.] Coldness; want of warmth.

If you come out of the sun suddenly into a shade, there followeth a chillness or shivering in all the body. Bacon.

This while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,
A generous chillness seizes ev'ry part,
The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryden.

CHIME, tshîm. n. s. [kime, Dutch.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME, tshîme. n. s. [The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Minshew suppose it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henshaw from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chirme, or churme, an old word for the sound of many voices, or instruments making a noise together.]

1. The consonant or harmonick sound of many correspondent instruments.

Hang our shaggy thighs with bells;
That, as we do strike a tune,
In our dance shall make a chime. Ben Jonson.

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard, of harp and organ. Milton's Par. Lost.

Love virtue, she alone is free;
She can teach you how to climb
Higher than the sphery chime. Milton.

2. The correspondence of sound.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhime,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryd.

3. The sound of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.

We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shaksp.

4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.

The conceptions of things are placed in their several degress of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another; in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned. Grew.

To CHIME, tshîme. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sound in harmony or consonance.

To make the rough recital aptly chime,
Or bring the sum of Gallia's loss to rhime,
'Tis mighty hard. Prior.

2. To correspond in relation or proportion.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, do belong one to another; and, through custom, do readily chime, and answer one another, in people's memories. Locke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the discoure. Arbuthnot.

4. To suit with; to agree.

Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, will, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange, and uncouth to me. Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.

But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhime. Smith.

To CHIME, tshîme. v. a.

1. To move, or strike, or cause to sound harmonically, or with just consonancy.

With lifted arms they order every blow,
And chime their sounding hammers in a row;
With labour'd anvils Ætna groans below. Dryden.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIME'RA, kê-mê'râ. n. s. [chimæra, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical Chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In short, the force of dreams is of a piece,
Chimeras all, and more absurd, or less. Dryden.

No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse to be the complex ideas of any real substances, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIME'RICAL, kê-mêr'rê-kâl. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantastically conceited; fantastick.

Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spectator.

CHIME'RICALLY, kê-mêr'rê-kâl-lê. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantastically.

CHI'MINAGE, kîm'mîn-âje. n. s. [from chimin, an old law word for a road.] A toll for passage through a forest. Cowell.

1. The passage through which the smoke ascends from the fire in the house.

Chimnies which scorn rejecting smoke. Swift.

2. The turret raised above the roof of the house, for conveyance of the smoke.

The night has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimnies were blown down. Shakspeare.

3. The fire-place.

The chimney
Is south the chamber, and the chimneypiece,
Chaste Dian bathing. Shakspeare.

The fire which the Chaldeans worshipped for a god, is crept into every man's chimney. Raleigh.

Low offices, which some neighbours hardly think it worth stirring from their chimney sides to obtain. Swift on Sacred Testimony.

CHI'MNEY-CORNER, tshîm'nê-kôr'nûr. n. s. [from chimney and corner.] The fireside; the seat on each end of the fire-grate: usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.

Yet some old men
Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner. Denham.

CHI'MNEYPIECE, tshîm'nê-pêêse. n.s. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round the fire-place

Polish and brighten the marble hearths and chimneypieces with a clout dipt in grease. Swift.

CHI'MNEYSWEEPER, tshîm'nê-swêê-pûr. n. s. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of soot.

To look like her, are chimneysweepers black;
And since her time are colliers counted bright. Shakspeare.

The little chimneysweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng. Gay.

Even lying Ned, the chimneysweeper of Savoy, and Tom the Portugal dustman, put in their claims. Arbuthnot.

2. It is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.

Golden lads and girls, all must,
As chimneysweepers, come to dust. Shakspeare.

CHIN, tshĭn. n. s. [cinne, Sax. kinn, Germ.] The part of the face beneath the under lip.

But all the words I could get of her, was wrying her waist, and thrusting out her chin. Sidney.

With his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him. Shakspeare.

He rais'd his hardy head, which sunk again,
And, sinking on his bosom, knock'd his chin. Dryd.

CHI'NA, tshâ'nè. n. s. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcelain; a species of vessels made in China, dimly transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other resists a very strong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.

Spleen, vapours, or small-pox, above them all;
And mistress of herself, tho' china fall. Pope.

After supper, carry your plate and china together in the same basket. Swift.

CHI'NA-ORANGE, tshâ'nè-ôr'ĭnje. n. s. [from China and orange.] The sweet orange: brought originally from China.

Not many years has the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain. Mortimer's Husb.

CHI'NA-ROOT, tshi'nâ-rôôt. n. s. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China.

CHI'NCOUGH, tshĭn'kôf. n. s. [perhaps more properly kinkough, from kinchin to pant, Dut. and cough.] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.

I have observed a chincough, complicated with an intermitting fever. Floyer on Humours.

CHINE, tshine. n. s. [eschine, Fr. schiena, Ital. spina, Lat, cein, Arm.]

1. The part of the back in which the spine or back bone is found.

She strake him such a blow upon his chine, that she opened all his body. Sidney.

He presents her with the tusky head,
And chine with rising bristles roughly spread. Dryd.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut out the burly boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep. Shakspeare.

He had killed eight fat hogs for this season, and he had dealt about his chines very liberally amongst his neighbours. Spectator.

To CHINE, tshine. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into chines.

He that in his line did chine the long ribb'd Apennine. Dryden.

CHINK, tshĭnk. n. s. [cinan to gape, Sax.] A small aperture longwise; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.

Pyramus and Thisbe did talk through the chink of a wall. Shaksp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Plagues also have been raised by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet they so contract the chink of their larinx, as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Other inventions, false and absurd, that are like so many chinks and holes to discover the rottenness of the whole fabrick. South.

In vain she search'd each cranny of the house,
Each gaping chink impervious to a mouse. Swift.

To CHINK, tshĭnk. v. a. [derived by Skinner from the sound.] To shake so as to make a sound.

He chinks his purse, and takes his seat of state:
With ready quills the dedicators wait. Pope's Dunciad.

To CHINK, tshĭnk. v. n. To sound by striking each other.

Lord Strutt's money shines as bright, and chinks as well, as 'squire South's. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

When not a guinea chinck'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwell's self was drain'd of all his hoards. Swift.

CHI'NKY, tshĭnk'è. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

But plaister thou the chincky hives with clay. Dryden's Virgil.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin. Philips's Poems.

CHINTS, tshĭnts. n. s. Cloth of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a charming chints, and Brussels lace,
Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face. Pope.

CHIRA'GRICAL, kĭ-râg'grè-kâl.[120 363] adj. [from chiragra, Lat.] Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragrical persons do suffer in the finger as well as in the rest, and sometimes first of all. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CHIRO'GRAPHER, kĭ-rŏg'grâ-fûr. n. s. [χειρ the hand, and γράφω to write.] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirographer's, to be engrossed. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

CHIRO'GRAPHIST, kĭ-rŏg'grâ-fĭst. n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes by examining the hand: the true word is chirosophist or chiromancer.

Let the phisiognomists examine his features; let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CHIRO'GRAPHY, kĭ-rŏg'grâ-fè.[518] n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHI'ROMANCER, kĭr'ò-mân-sûr. n. s. [See CHIROMANCY.] One that foretels future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle sort, who have not much to spare,
To chiromancers' cheaper art repair,
Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair. Dryden's Juvenal.

CHI'ROMANCY, kĭr'rò-mân-sè.[358 519] n. s. [χειρ the hand, and μαντις a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chiromancy, that spots in the top of the nails do signify things past; in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, things to come. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To CHIRP, tshêrp. v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up. The Dutch have circken.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away,
Till hard bythem both he and she did stray. Sidney.

Came he right now to sing a raven's note:
And thinks he that the chirping of a wren
Can chase away the first conceived sound? Shak.

No chirping lark the welkin sheen invokes. Gay's Pastorals.

The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around. Thomson's Spring.

To CHIRP, tshêrp. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle. Johnson.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.

CHIRP, tshêrp. n. s. [from the verb.] The voice of birds and insects.

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,
And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet. Spectator.

CHI'RPER, tshêrp'pûr.[89] n. s. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

To CHIRRE, tshûr. v. n. [ceorpian, Sax.] See CHURME. To coo as a pigeon. Junius.

CHIRU'RGEON, kĭ-rûr'jè-ûn.[363] n. s. [χειρουργος, from χειρ the hand, and ἔργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feelings, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not seeing his need of a chirurgeon. South's Sermons.

CHIRU'RGERY, kī-rûr'jė-rė. n. s. [from chirurgeon.] The art of curing by external applications. This is called surgery.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed. Sidney.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones. Wiseman.

CHIRU'RGICAL, kī-rûr'jė-kâl. } adj. See
CHIRU'RGICK, kī-rûr'jik.[353] } CHIRURGEON.

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold. Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.
3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments. Wilkins.

CHI'SEL, tshĭz'zĭl.[102 99] n. s. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her. Shaksp.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroaked them in oil. Wotton's Architecture.

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin. Dryden.

To CHI'SEL, tshĭz'zĭl.[102] v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT, tshĭt. n. s. [according to Dr. Hickes, from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chico, little, Span.]

1. A child; a baby. Generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jest. Anonymous.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with malsters.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew the chit or sprit at the root-end. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. A freckle. [from chick-pease.] In this sense it is seldom used.

To CHIT, tshĭt. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain; cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHI'TCHAT, tshĭt'tshât. n. s. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of a female society, who call ourselves the chitchat club. Spectator.

CHI'TTERLINGS, tshĭt'tûr-lĭngz.[555] n. s. without singular. [from schyterlingh, Dut. Minshew; from kutteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Skinner.

CHI'TTY, tshĭt'tė. adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHI'VALROUS, tshĭv'ăl-rûs. adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. A word now out of use.

And noble minds of yore allied were
In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Fairy Q.

CHI'VALRY, tshĭv'ăl-rė. n. s. [chevalerie, Fr. knighthood, from cheval, a horse; as eques, in Latin.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers. Bacon's Essays.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as, valour, dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain
The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry. Shaksp.

I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shaks.

3. The general system of knighthood.

Solemnly he swore,
That by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,
And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,
He would not cease till he reveng'd their wrongs. Dryden.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not now in use.

They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chivalries. Sidney.

5. The body or order of knights.

And by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shakspeare.

6. In law.

Servitium militare, of the French chevalier; a tenure of land by knight's service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services, as they thought good; and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and rustick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord; and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king, is properly called sergeantry; and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person, as well as of the king, is called scutagium. Cowell.

7. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances.

CHI'VES, tshĭvz. n. s. [cive, Fr. Skinner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers with seeds at the end.

The masculine or prolific seed contained in the chives or apices of the stamina. Ray on the Creation

2. A species of small onion. Skinner.

CHLORO'SIS, klŏ-rŏ'sĭs.[353] n. s. [from χλόος, green.] The green sickness.

To CHOAK, tshōke. See CHOKE.

CHO'COLATE, tshŏk'ŏ-lāte.[91] n. s. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cacao tree.

The tree hath a rose flower, of a great number of petals, from whose impalement arises the pointal, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an oblong heap, and slit down, somewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in several places between the tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA. Miller.

2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of cacao nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.

The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of their cacao-nuts, achiot, and other drugs, which their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate. Chambers.

3. The liquor made by a solution of chocolate in hot water.

Chocolate is certainly much the best of these three exotick liquors: its oil seems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne. Arbuth. on Alim.

In fumes of burning chocolate shall grow,
And tremble at the sea that froths below! Pope.

CHO'COLATE-HOUSE, tshŏk-ŏ'lāte-hŏuse. n. s. [chocolate and house.] A house where company is entertained with chocolate.

Ever since that time, Lisander has been twice a day at the chocolate-house. Tatler.

CHODE, tshōde. [the old preterite from chide.] See CHIDE.

And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban. Genesis.

CHOICE, tshŏise. n. s. [choix, French.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to choose,
The choice is made, for I must both refuse. Dryd.

Soft elocution doth thy style renown,
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice.
Dryd. Persius.

2. The power of choosing; election.

Choice there is not, unless the thing which we take be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If fire consume the stable, it chooseth not so to do, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other. Hooker.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myself. L'Estrange.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas, all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in choosing; curiosity of distinction.

Julius Cæsar did write a collection of apophthegms, it is pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon's Apophthegms.

4. The thing chosen; the thing taken, or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not so rich in birth as beauty;
That you might well enjoy her. Shaks.

Take to thee, from among the cherubim,
Thy choice of flaming warriours. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Now, Mars, she said, let fame exalt her voice;
Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

5. The best part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hooker.

Thou art a mighty prince: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead. Genesis.

Their riders, the flow'r and choice
Of many provinces, from bound to bound. Milton.

6. Several things proposed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakspeare.

7. To make choice of. To choose; to take from several things proposed.

Wisdom of what herself approves makes choice,
Nor is led captive by the common voice. Denham.

CHOICE, tshôise. adj. [choisi, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having set before the king the choicest of wines and fruits, he told him the best part of his entertainment was to come. Guardian.

Thus, in a sea of folly toss'd,
My choicest hours of life are lost. Swift.

2. Chary; frugal; careful. Used of persons.

He that is choice of his time, will also be choice of his company, and choice of his actions.
Taylor's Holy Living.

CHO'ICELESS, tshôise'lês. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of choosing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter of which the cylinder is made, nor the round voluble form of it, are any more imputable to that dead choiceless creature; than the first motion of it; and, therefore, it cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcileableness of fate with choice. Hammond.

CHO'ICELY, tshôisé'lè. adv. [from choice.]

1. Curiously; with exact choice.

A band of men,
Collected choicely from each county some. Shaks.

2. Valuably; excellently.

It is certain it is choicely good. Walton's Angler.

CHO'ICENESS, tshôise-nês. n. s. [from choice.] Nicety; particular value.

Carry into the shade such auriculas, seedlings, or plants, as are for their choiceness reserved in pots.
Evelyn's Kalendar.

CHOIR, kwire.[300 356] n. s. [chorus, Lat.]

1. An assembly or band of singers.

They now assist the choir
Of angels, who their songs admire. Waller.

2. The singers in divine worship.

The choir
With all the choicest musick of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. Shaks.

3. The part of the church where the choristers or singers are placed.

The lords and ladies, having brought the queen
To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off
At distance from her. Shakspeare.

To CHOKE, tshôke. v. a. [aceocan, Sax. from ceoca the cheek or mouth. According to Minshew, from חב; from whence, probably, the Spanish ahogar.]

1. To suffocate; to kill by stopping the passage of respiration.

But when to my good lord I prove untrue,
I'll choke myself. Shaks.

While you thunder'd, clouds of dust did choke
Contending troops. Waller.

2. To stop up; to obstruct; to block up a passage.

Men troop'd up to the king's capacious court,
Whose porticos were chok'd with the resort.
Chapman.

They are at a continual expence to cleanse the ports, and keep them from being choked up, by the help of several engines. Addison on Italy.

While pray'rs and tears his destin'd progress stay,
And crowds of mourners choke their sov'reign's way.
Tickell.

3. To hinder by obstruction or confinement.

As two spent swimmers, that do cling together,
And choke their art. Shaksp.

She cannot lose her perfect power to see,
Tho' mists and clouds do choke her window-light.
Davies.

It seemeth the fire is so choked, as not to be able to remove the stone. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

You must make the mould big enough to contain the whole fruit, when it is grown to the greatest; for else you will choke the spreading of the fruit.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The fire, which chok'd in ashes lay,
A load too heavy for his soul to move,
Was upward blown below, and brush'd away by love.
Dryden.

4. To suppress.

And yet we ventur'd; for the gain propos'd
Chok'd the respect of likely peril fear'd. Shaks.

Confess thee freely of thy sin;
For to deny each article with oath,
Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception
That I do groan withal. Shaksp.

5. To overpower.

And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. Luke.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and darnel choke the rising corn.
Dryden's Past.

CHOKE, tshôke. n. s. [from the verb.] The filamentous or capillary part of an artichoke. A cant word.

CHOKE-PEAR, tshôke'pâre. n. s. [from choke and pear.]

1. A rough, harsh, unpalatable pear.

2. Any aspersion or sarcasm, by which another is put to silence. A low term.

CHO'LAGOGUES, kôl'â-gôgz. n. s. [χολὼν bile.] Medicines which have the power of purging bile or choler.

CHO'LER, kôl'lûr. n. s. [cholera, Lat. from χολη.]

1. The bile.

Marcilius Ficimus increases these proportions, adding two more of pure choler. Wotton on Educa.

There would be a main defect if such a feeding animal, and so subject unto diseases from bilious causes, should want a proper conveyance for choler.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. The humour which, by its super-abundance is supposed to produce irascibility.

It engenders choler; planteth anger;
And better 'twere that both of us did fast,
Since, of ourselves, ourselves are cholerick,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Shaks.

3. Anger; rage.

Put him to choler straight: he hath been used
Ever to conquer, and to have his word
Of contradiction. Shaksp.

He, methinks, is no great scholar,
Who can mistake desire for choler. Prior.

CHO'LERICK, kôl'lûr-rîk. adj. [cholericus, Latin.]

1. Abounding with choler.

Our two great poets being so different in their tempers, the one cholerick and sanguine, the other phlegmatick and melancholick. Dryden.

Raleigh's History of the World.

CHO'LERICKNESS, kôl'lûr-rîk-nês. n. s. [from cholerick.] Anger; irascibility; peevishness.

To CHOOSE, tshôôze. v. a. I chose, I have chosen, or chose. [choisir, Fr. ceoꝛan, Sax. kiesen, Germ.]

1. To take by way of preference of several things offered; not to reject.

Did I choose him to out of all the tribes of Israel to be my priest. 1 Sam. ii. 28.

I may neither choose whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike. Shaksp.

If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him. Shaksp.

2. To take; not to refuse.

Let us choose to us judgment; let us know among ourselves what is good. Job.

The will has still so much freedom left as to enable it to choose any act in its kind good; as also to refuse any act in its kind evil. South's Sermons.

3. To select; to pick out of a number.

How much less shall I answer him, and choose out my words to reason with him? Job.

4. To elect for eternal happiness; to predestinate to life. A term of theologians.

To CHOOSE, tshôôze. v. n. To have the power of choice between different things. It is generally joined with a negative, and signifies must necessarily be.

Without the influence of the Deity supporting things, their utter annihilation could not choose but follow. Hooker.

Knaves abroad,
Who having by their own importunate suit
Convinced or supplied them, they cannot choose
But they must blab. Shaksp.

When a favorite shall be raised upon the foundation of merit, then can he not choose but prosper.
Bacon.

Threw down a golden apple in her way;
For all her haste, she could not choose but stay.
Dryden.

Those who are persuaded that they shall continue for ever, cannot choose but aspire after a happiness commensurate to their duration. Tillotson.

CHO'OSER, tshôô'zûr. n. s. [from choose.] He that has the power or office of choosing, elector.

Come all into this nut, quoth she;
Come closely in, be rul'd by me;
Each one may here a chooser be,
For room you need not wrestle. Drayton.

In all things to deal with other men, as if I might be my own chooser. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

This generality is not sufficient to make a good chooser, without a more particular contraction of his judgment. Wotton.

To CHOP, tshôp. v. a. [kappen, Dutch; couper, French.]

1. To cut with a quick blow.

What shall we do, if we perceive
Lord Hastings will not yield to our complots?
——— Chop off his head, man. Shaksp.

Within these three days his head is to be chopt off. Shaksp.

And where the cleaver chops the heifer's spoil,
Thy breathing nostril hold. Gay's Trivia.

2. To devour eagerly: with up.

You are for making a hasty meal, and for chopping up your entertainment like an hungry clown.
Dryden

Upon the opening of his mouth he drops his breakfast, which the fox presently chopped up. L'Estrange.

3. To mince; to cut into small pieces.

They break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot. Micah.

Some granaries are made with clay, mixed with hair, chopped straw, mulch, and such like. Mortimer's Husbandry.

By dividing of them into chapters and verses, they are so chopped and minced, and stand so broken and divided, that the common people take the verses usually for different aphorisms. Locke.

4. To break into chinks.

I remember the cow's dugs, that her pretty chopt hands had milked. Shaksp.

To CHOP, tshôp. v. n.

1. To do any thing with a quick and unexpected motion, like that of a blow: as we say, the wind chops about, that is, changes suddenly.

If the body repercussing be near, and yet not so near as to make a concurrent echo, it choppeth with you upon the sudden. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. To catch with the mouth.

Out of greediness to get both, he chops at the shadow, and loses the substance. L'Estrange.

3. To light or happen upon a thing suddenly: with upon.

To CHOP, tshôp. v. a. [ceapan, Sax. koopen, Dut. to buy.]

1. To purchase, generally by way of truck; to give one thing for another.

The chopping of bargains, when a man buys not to hold but to sell again, grindeth upon the seller and the buyer. Bacon.

2. To put one thing in the place of another.

Sets up communities and senses,
To chop and change intelligences. Hudibras.

Affirm the Trigons chopp'd and chang'd,
The watry with the fiery rang'd. Hudibras.

We go on chopping and changing our friends, as well as our horses. L'Estrange.

3. To bandy; to altercate; to return one thing or word for another.

Let not the council at the bar chop with the judge, nor wind himself into the handling of the cause a-new, after the judge hath declared his sentence. Bacon.

You'll never leave off your chopping of logick, till your skin is turned over your ears for prating. L'Estrange.

CHOP, tshôp. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A piece chopped off. See CHIP.

Sir William Capel compounded for sixteen hundred pounds; yet Empson would have cut another chop out of him, if the king had not died. Bacon.

2. A small piece of meat, commonly of mutton.

Old Cross condemns all persons to be fops,
That can't regale themselves with mutton chops.
King's Cook.

4. A crack or cleft.

Water will make wood to swell; as we see in the filling of the chops of bowls, by laying them in water. Bacon.

CHOP-HOUSE, tshôp'hôûse. n. s. [from chop and house.] A mean house of entertainment, where provision ready dressed is sold.

I lost my place at the chop-house, where every man eats in publick a mess of broth, or chop of meat in silence. Spectator.

CHO'PIN, tshô-pêên'. n. s. [French.]

1. A French liquid measure, containing nearly a pint of Winchester.

2. A term used in Scotland for a quart of wine measure.

CHO'PPING, tshôp'ping. participial adj. [In this sense, of uncertain etymology.] An epithet frequently applied to infants, by way of ludicrous commendation: imagined by Skinner to signify lusty, from cap, Sax.; by others to mean a child that would bring money at a market. Perhaps a greedy, hungry child, likely to live.

Both Jack Freeman and Ned Wild
Would own the fair and chopping child. Fenton.

CHO'PPING-BLOCK, tshôp'ping-blôk. n. s. [chop and block.] A log of wood, on which any thing is laid to be cut in pieces.

The straight smooth elms are good for axletrees, boards, chopping-blocks. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHO'PPING-KNIFE, tshôp'ping-nife. n. s. [chop and knife.] A knife with which cooks mince their meat.

Here comes Dametas, with a sword by his side, a forest-bill on his neck, and a chopping-knife under his girdle. Sidney.

CHO'PPY, tshôp'pê. adj. [from chop.] Full of holes, clefts, or cracks.

You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skinny lips. Shaksp.

CHOPS, tshôps. n. s. without a singular. [corrupted probably from CHAPS, which see.]

1. The mouth of a beast.

So soon as my chops begin to walk, yours must be walking too, for company. L'Estrange.

2. The mouth of a man, used in contempt.

He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewel to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nape to th' chops.
Shakspeare.

3. The mouth of any thing in familiar language; as of a river, of a smith's vice.

CHO'RAL, kô'râl.[353] adj. [from chorus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to or composing a choir or concert.

All sounds on fret by string or golden wire
Temper'd soft tunings intermix'd with voice,
Choral or unison. Milton.
Choral symphonies. Milton.

2. Singing in a choir.

And choral seraphs sung the second day. Amhurst.

CHORD, kôrd. n. s. [chorda, Lat.] When it signifies a rope or string in general, it is written cord: when its primitive signification is preserved, the h is retained.

1. The string of a musical instrument.

Who mov'd
Their stops and chords, was seen; his volant touch
Instinct thro' all proportions, low and high,
Fled and pursued transverse the resonant fugue.
Milton.

2. [In geometry.] A right line, which joins the two ends of any arch of a circle.

To CHORD, kôrd.[353] v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with strings or chords; to string.

What passion cannot musick raise and quell?
When Jubal struck the chorded shell,
His list'ning brethren stood around. Dryden.

CHORDE'E, kôr-dêê'. n. s. [from chorda, Lat.] A contraction of the fœnum.

CHO'RION, kô'rê-ôn. n. s. [χωρεῖν to contain.] The outward membrane that enwraps the fœtus.

CHO'RISTER, kwîr'rîs-tûr.[300 356] n. s. [from chorus.]

1. A singer in cathedrals, usually a singer of the lower order; a singing boy.

2. A singer in a concert. This sense is, for the most part, confined to poetry.

And let the roaring organs loudly play
The praises of the Lord in lively notes;
The whiles, with hollow throats,
The choristers the joyous anthem sing. Spenser.

The new-born phœnix takes his way;
Of airy choristers a numerous train
Attend his progress. Dryden.

The musical voices and accents of the aerial choristers. Ray on the Creation.

CHORO'GRAPHER, kô-rôg'grâ-fûr. n. s. [χωρὴ a region, and γράφω to describe.] He that describes particular region or countries.

CHOROGRA'PHICAL, kôr-rô-grâf'ê-kâl. adj. [See CHOROGRAPHER.] Descriptive of particular regions or countries; laying down the boundaries of countries.

CHOROGRA'PHICALLY, kôr-rô-graf'ê-kâl-lê. adv. [from chorographical.] In a chorographical manner; according to the rule of chorography; in a manner descriptive of particular regions.

CHORO'GRAPHY, kô-rôg'grâ-fê. n. s. [See CHOROGRAPHER.] The art or practice of describing particular regions, or laying down the limits and boundaries of particular provinces. It is less in its object than geography, and greater than topography.

CHO'RUS, kô'rûs.[353] n. s. [chorus, Latin.]

1. A number of singers; a concert.

The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of singers; afterwards one actor was introduced. Dryden.

Never did a more full and unspotted chorus of human creatures join together in a hymn of devotion. Addison.

In praise so just let every voice be join'd,
And fill the general chorus of mankind! Pope.

2. The persons who are supposed to behold what passes in the acts of a tragedy, and sing their sentiments between the acts.

For supply,
Admit me chorus to this history. Shaksp.

3. The song between the acts of a tragedy.

4. Verses of a song in which the company join the singer.

CHOSE, tshôze. [the preter tense, and sometimes the participle passive, of To choose.]

Our sovereign here above the rest might stand,
And here be chose again to rule the land. Dryden.

CHO'SEN, tshô'zn.[103] [the participle passive of To choose.]

If king Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us.
With some few bands of chosen soldiers,
I'll undertake to land them on our coast. Shak.

CHOUGH, tshûf.[391] n. s. [ceo, Sax. choucas, Fr.] A bird which frequents the rocks by the sea side, like a jackdaw, but bigger. Hanmer.

In birds, kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks, crows with ravens, daws and choughs. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To crows the like impartial grace affords,
And choughs and daws, and such republick birds.
Dryden.

CHOULE, tshôûl. n. s. [commonly pronounced and written jowl.] The crop of a bird.

The choule or crop, adhering unto the lower side of the bill, and so descending by the throat, is a bag or satchel. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To CHOUSE, tshôûse. v. a. [The original of this word is much doubted by Skinner, who tries to deduce it from the French gosser, to laugh at; or joucher to wheedle; and from the Teutonick kosen to prattle. It is perhaps a fortuitous and cant word, without etymology.]

1. To cheat; to trick; to impose upon.

Freedom and zeal have chous'd you o'er and o'er;
Pray give us leave to bubble you once more. Dryd.

From London they came, silly people to chouse,
Their lands and their faces unknown. Swift.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

When geese and pullen are seduc'd,
And sows of sucking pigs are chous'd. Hudibras.

CHOUSE, tshôûse. n. s. [from the verb. This word is derived by Henshaw from kiaus, or chiaus, a messenger of the Turkish court; who, says he, is little better than a fool.]

1. A bubble; a tool; a man fit to be cheated.

A sottish chouse,
Who, when a thief has robb'd his house,
Applies himself to cunning men. Hudibras.

2. A trick or sham.

To CHO'WTER, tshôû'tûr. v. n. To grumble or mutter like a froward child. Philips.

CHRISM, krîzm.[353] n. s. [χρίζμα an ointment.] Unguent, or unction; it is only applied to sacred ceremonies.

One act, never to be repeated, is not the thing that Christ's eternal priesthood, denoted especially by his unction or chrism, refers to. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

CHRI'SOM, krîz'm. n. s. [See CHRISM.] A child that dies within a month after its birth. So called from the chrisom-cloth, a cloth anointed with holy unguent, which the children anciently wore till they were christened.

When the convulsions were but few, the number of chrisoms and infants was greater. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

To CHRI'STEN, krîs'sn.[472] v. a. [chpiɣtnian, Saxon.]

1. To baptize; to initiate into christianity by water.

2. To name; to denominate.

Where such evils as these reign, christen the thing what you will, it can be no better than a mock millenium. Burnet.

CHRI'STENDOM, krîs'sn-dûm. n. s. [from Christ and dom.] The collective body of christianity; the regions of which the inhabitants profess the christian religion.

What hath been done, the parts of christendom most afflicted best can testify. Hooker.

An older and a better soldier, none
That christendom gives out. Shaksp.

His computation is universally received over all christendom. Holder on Time.

CHRI'STENING, krîs'sn-îng. n. s. [from the verb.] The ceremony of the first initiation into christianity.

The queen was with great solemnity crowned at Westminster, about two years after the marriage; like an old christening that had staid long for godfathers. Bacon.

We shall insert the causes why the account of christenings hath been neglected more than that of burials. Graunt.

The day of the christening being come, the house was filled with gossips. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CHRI'STIAN, krîst'yûn.[291] n. s. [christianus, Lat.] A professor of the religion of Christ.

We christians have certainly the best and the holiest, the wiset and most reasonable, religion in the world. Tillotson.

CHRI'STIAN, krîst'yûn.[113] adj. Professing the religion of Christ.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shaksp.

CHRI'STIAN-NAME, krîst'yûn-nâme. n. s. The name given at the font, distinct from the gentilitious name, or surname.

CHRI'STIANISM, krîst'yûn-îzm. n.s. [christianismus, Lat.]

CHRISTMAS-BOX, krîs'mâs-bôks. n.s. [from christmas and box.] The box in which little presents are collected at Christmas.

When time comes round, a Christmas-box they bear,
And one day makes them rich for all the year. Gay.

CHRISTMAS-FLOWER, krîs'mâs-flôû'ûr. n.s. Hellebore.

CHRIST'S-THORN, krists'*th*ôrn. n. s. [So called, as Skinner fancies, because the thorns have some likeness to a cross.] A plant.

It hath long sharp spines: the flower has five leaves, in form of a rose: out of the flower-cup, which is divided into several segments, rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit, shaped like a bonnet, having a shell almost globular, which is divided into three cells, in each of which is contained a roundish seed. This is by many persons supposed to be the plant from which our Saviour's crown of thorns was composed. Miller.

CHROMA'TICE, krô-mât'îk. adj. [χρῶμα colour.]

1. Relating to colour.

I am now come to the third part of painting which is called the chromatick, or colouring. Dryd.

2. Relating to a certain species of ancient musick, now unknown.

It was observed, he never touched his lyre in such a truly chromatick and enharmonick manner. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CHRO'NICAL, krôn'ê-kâl. } adj. [from χρόνος time.]
CHRO'NICK, krôn'îk.[509] }

A chronical distemper is of length; as dropsies, asthmas, and the like. Quincy.

Of diseases some are chronical, and of long duration; as quartane agues, scurvy, wherein we defer the cure unto more advantageous seasons. Brown.

The lady's use of these excellencies is to divert the old man when he is out of the pangs of a chronical distemper. Spectator.

CHRO'NICLE, krôn'ê-kl.[353] n. s. [chronique, Fr. from χρόνος time.]

1. A register or account of events in order of time.

No more yet of this;
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast. Shaksp.

2. A history.

You lean too confidently on those Irish chronicles, which are most fabulous and forged. Spenser.

If from the field I should return once more,
I and my sword will earn my chronicle. Shaksp.

I am traduc'd by tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing. Shakspeare.

I give up to historians the generals and heroes which croud their annals, together with those which you are to produce for the British chronicle. Dryd.

To CHRO'NICLE, krôn'ê-k l. v. a. [fromthe noun].

1. To record in chronicle, or history.

This to rehearse, should rather be to chronicle times than to search into reformation of abuses in that realm. Spenser.

2. To register; to record.

For now the Devil, that told me I did well,
Says that this deed is chronicled in hell. Shaksp.

Love is your master, for he masters you:
And he that is so yoked by a fool,
Methinks, should not be chronicled for wise. Shaksp.

I shall be the jest of the town; nay, in two days I expect to be chronicled in ditty, and sung in woeful ballad. Congreve.

CHRO'NICLER, krôn'ê-klûr.[98] n. s. [from chronicle.]

1. A writer of chronicles; a recorder of events in order of time.

Here gathering chroniclers, and by them stand
Giddy fantastick poets of each land. Donne.

2. A historian; one that keeps up the memory of things past.

I do herein rely upon these bards, or Irish chroniclers. Spenser.

This custom was held by the Druids and bards of our ancient Britons, and of latter times by the Irish chroniclers, called rimers. Raleigh.

CHRO'NOGRAM, krôn'ô-grâm. n. s. [χρόνος time, and γράφω to write.] An inscription including the date of any action.

Of this kind the following is an example:

Gloria lausque Deo, sæ*CL*or*VI*in sæc*VI*a sunto.

A chronogrammatical verse, which includes not only this year, 1660, but numerical letters enough to reach above a thousand years further, until the year 2867. Howel.

CHRONOGRAMMA'TICAL, krôn-nô-grâm-mât'ê-kâl. adj. [from chronogram.] Belonging to a chronogram. See the last example.

CHRONOGRA'MMATIST, krôn-nô-grâm-mâtîst. n. s. [from chronogram.] A writer of chronograms.

There are foreign universities, where, as you praise a man in England for being an excellent philosopher or poet, it is an ordinary character to be a great chronogrammatist. Addison.

CHRONO'LOGER, krò-nôl'lò-jûr. n. s. [χρόνος time, and λογος doctrine.] He that studies or explains the science of computing past time, or of ranging past events according to their proper years.

Chronologers differ among themselves about most great epochas. Holder on Time.

CHRONOLO'GICAL, krôn-nò-lôdje'è-kâl. adj. [from chronology.] Relating to the doctrine of time.

Thus much touching the chronological account of some times and things past, without confining myself to the exactness of years. Hale's Origin of Mank.

CHRONOLO'GICALLY, krôn-nò-lôdje'è-kâl-lè. adv. [from chronologica.] In a chronological manner; according to the laws or rules of chronology; according to the exact series of time.

CHRONO'LOGIST, krò-nôl'ò-jîst. n. s. [See CHRONOLOGER.] One that studies or explains time; one that ranges past events according to the order of time; a chronologer.

According to these chronologists, the prophecy of the Rabin, that the world should last but six thousand years, has been long disproved. Brown.

All that learned noise and dust of the chronologist is wholly to be avoided. Locke on Education.

CHRONO'LOGY, krò-nôl'ò-jè. n. s. [χρόνος time, and λογος doctrine.] The science of computing and adjusting the periods of time; as the revolution of the sun and moon; and of computing time past, and referring each event to the proper year.

And the measure of the year not being so perfectly known to the ancients, rendered it very difficult for them to transmit a true chronology to succeeding ages. Holder on Time.

Where I allude to the customs of the Greeks, I believe I may be justified by the strictest chronology; though a poet is not obliged to the rules that confine an historian. Prior.

CHRONO'METER, krò-nôm'mè-tûr. n. s. [from χρονος and μέτρον.] An instrument for the exact mensuration of time.

According to observation made with a pendulum chronometer, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds. Derham.

CHRY'SALIS, krîs'sâ-lîs.[503] n. s. [from χρύσος gold, because of the golden colour in the nymphæ of some insects.] A term used by some naturalists for aurelia, or the first apparent change of the maggot of any species of insects. Chambers.

CHRY'SOLITE, krîs'sò-lîte.[155] n. s. [χρύσος gold, and λιθος a stone.] A precious stone of a dusky green, with a cast of yellow. Woodward.

Such another world,
Of one intire and perfect chrysolite,
I'd not have sold her for. Shakspeare.

If metal, part seem'd gold, part silver clear:
If stone, carbuncle most, or chrysolite. Milton.

CHRYSO'PRASUS, krî-sŏp'prâ-sûs. n. s. χρύσος gold, and prasinus green.] A precious stone of a yellow colour, approaching to green.

The ninth a topaz, the tenth a chrysoprasus. Rev.

CHUB, tshûb. n. s. [from cop a great head, Skinner.] A river fish. The chevin.

The chub is in prime from Midmay to Candlemas, but best in winter. He is full of small bones: he eats waterish; not firm, but limp and tasteless: nevertheless he may be so dressed as to make him very good meat. Walton's Angler.

CHU'BBED, tshûb'bîd.[99] adj. [from chub.] Big-headed like a chub.

To CHUCK, tshûk. v. n. [A word probably formed in imitation of the sound that it expresses; or perhaps corrupted from chick.] To make a noise like a hen when she calls her chickens.

To CHUCK, tshûk. v. a.

1. To call as a hen calls her young.

Then crowing clapp'd his wings, th' appointed call
To chuck his wives together in the hall. Dryd. Fab.

2. To give a gentle blow under the chin, so as to make the mouth strike together.

Come, chuck the infant under the chin, force a smile, and cry, Ah, the boy takes after his mother's relations. Congreve.

CHUCK, tshûk. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a hen.

He made the chuck four or five times, that people use to make to chickens when they call them. Temple.

2. A word of endearment, corrupted from chicken or chick.

Come, your promise.——What promise, chuck. Shakspeare.

3. A sudden small noise.

CHUCK-FARTHING, tshûk'fâr-thĭng n. s. [chuck and farthing.] A play, at which the money falls with a chuck into the hole beneath.

To CHU'CKLE, tshûk'kl.[405] v. n. [schaecken, Dutch.] To laugh vehemently, to laugh convulsively.

What tale shall I to my old father tell?
'Twill make him chuckle thou 'rt bestow'd so well. Dryden.

She to intrigues was e'en hard-hearted;
She chuckled when a bawd was carted. Prior.

To CHU'CKLE, tshûk'kl. v. a. [from chuck.]

1. To call as a hen.

I am not far from the women's apartment, I am sure; and if these birds are within distance, here's that will chuckle 'em together. Dryden.

2. To cocker; to fondle.

Your confessor, that parcel of holy guts and garbidge; he must chuckle you, and moan you. Dryden.

CHU'ET, tshôô'ît.[99] n. s. [probably from To chew.] An old word, as it seems, for forced meat.

As for chuets, which are likewise minced meat, instead of butter and fat, it were good to moisten them partly with cream, or almond or pistachio milk. Bacon's Natural History.

CHUFF, tshûf. n. s. [A word of uncertain derivation; perhaps corrupted from chub; or derived from kwf, Welsh, a stock.] A coarse, fat-headed, blunt clown.

Hang ye, gorbellied knaves, are you undone?
No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here. Shakspeare.

A less generous chuff than this in the fable, would have hugged his bags to the last. L'Estrange.

CHU'FFILY, tshûf'fè-lè. adv. [from chuffy.] Surlily; stomachfully.

John answered chuffily. Clarissa.

CHU'FFINESS, tshûf'fè-nès. n. s. [from chuffy.] Clownishness; surliness.

CHURCH, tshûrtsh. n. s. [cipce, Sax. κυριακὴ.]

1. The collective body of christians, usually termed the catholick church.

The church, being a supernatural society, doth differ from natural societies in this; that the persons unto whom we associate ourselves in the one, are men, simply considered as men; but they to whom we be joined in the other, are God, angels and holy men. Hooker.

2. The body of christians adhering to one particular opinion, or form of worship.

The church is a religious assembly, or the large fair building where they meet; and sometimes the same word means a synod of bishops, or of presbyters; and in some places it is the pope and a general council. Watts's Logick.

3. The place which christians consecrate to the worship of God.

It comprehends the whole church, viz. the name or body of the church, together with the chancel, which is even included under the word church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

That churches were consecrated unto none but the Lord only, the very general name chiefly doth sufficiently shew: church doth signify no other thing than the Lord's house. Hooker.

Tho' you unty the winds, and let them fight Against the churches. Shakspeare.

4. It is used frequently in conjunction with other words; as church-member, the member of a church; church-power, spiritual or ecclesiastical authority.

To CHURCH, tshûrtsh. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform with any one the office of returning thanks in the church after any signal deliverance, as from the danger of childbirth.

CHURCH-ALE, tshûrtsh'âle. n. s. [from church and ale.] A wake, or feast, commemoratory of the dedication of the church.

For the church-ale, two young men of the parish are yearly chosen to be wardens, who make collection among the parishioners of what provision it pleaseth them to bestow. Carew.

CHURCH-ATTIRE, tshûrtsh-ât-tîre'. n. s. The habit in which men officiate at divine service.

These and such like were their discourses, touching that church-attire, which with us, for the most part, is used in publick prayer. Hooker.

CHURCH-AUTHORITY, tshûrtsh-âw-*th*ŏr'è-tè. n. s. Ecclesiastical power; spiritual jurisdiction.

In this point of church-authority, I have sifted all the little scraps alleged. Atterbury.

The bishop has the care of seeing that all christians, after their deaths, be not denied church-burial, according to the usuage and custom of the place. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHURCH-FOUNDER, tshûrtsh-fôûnd'ûr. n. s. He that builds or endows a church.

Whether emperors or bishops in those days were church-founders, the solemn dedication of churches they thought not to be a work in itself either vain or superstitious. Hooker.

CHURCHMAN, tshûrtsh'mân.[88] n. s. [church and man.]

1. An ecclesiastick; a clergyman; one that ministers in sacred things.

If any thing be offered to you touching the church and churchmen, or church-government, rely not only upon yourself. Bacon.

A very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a church into order, that had been so long neglected and that was so ill filled by many weak and more wilful churchmen. Clarendon.

Patience in want, and poverty of mind,
These marks of church and churchmen he design'd,

2. An adherent to the church of England.

CHURCH-WARDENS, tshûrtsh-wâr'dnz.[103] n. s. [See WARDEN.] Officers yearly chosen, by the consent of the minister and parishioners, according to the custom of each place, to look to the church, church-yard, and such things as belong to both: and to observe the behaviour of the parishioners, for such faults as appertain to the jurisdiction or censure of the ecclesiastical court. They are a kind of corporation, enabled by law to sue for any thing belonging to their church, or poor of their parish. Cowell.

There should likewise church-wardens of the gravest men in the parish, be appointed, as they be here in England. Spenser.

Our church-wardens
Feast on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.

CHU'RCHYARD, tshûrtsh'yârd. n. s. The ground adjoining to the church, in which the dead are buried; a cemetery.

I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the churchyard, yet I will adventure. Shakspeare.

In churchyards where they bury much, the earth will consume the corps in far shorter time than other earth will. Bacon

No place so sacred from such fops is barr'd;
Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's church-yard. Pope.

CHURL, tshûrl. n. s. [ceorl, Sax. carl, in German, is strong, rusticks being always observed to be strong bodied.]

1. A rustick; a countryman; a labourer.

He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work or use any hard labour, which he saith is the life of a peasant or churl. Spenser's State of Ireland.

One of the baser sort, which they call churls, being reproved for his oath, answered confidently that his lord commanded him. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Churl, upon thy eyes I throw
All the pow'r this charm doth owe. Shaksp.

From this light cause th' infernal maid prepares
The country churls to mischief, hate, and wars. Dryden.

2. A rude, surly, ill-bred man.

A churl's courtesy rarely comes, but either for gain or falsehood. Sidney.

3. A miser; a niggard; a selfish or greedy wretch.

Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end!
O churl, drink all, and leave no friendly drop
To help me after! Shaksp.

CHU'RLISH, tshûr'lîsh. adj. [from churl.]

1. Rude; brutal; harsh; austere; sour; merciless; unkind; uncivil.

A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears,
Those at her father's churlish feet she tender'd. Shakspeare.

The interruption of their churlish drums
Cuts off more circumstance; they are at hand
To parly, or to fight. Shaksp.

A lion in love with a lass, desired her father's consent. The answer was churlish enough: He'd never marry his daughter to a brute. L'Estrange.

He the pursuit of churlish beasts
Preferr'd to sleeping on her breasts. Waller.

CI'CATRICE, CI'CATRIX, sĭk'ā-trĭs.[142] n. s [cicatrix, Lat.]

1. The scar remaining after a wound.

One captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek. Shakspeare.

2. A mark; an impression; so used by Shakspeare less properly.

Lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impressure
Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakspeare.

CICATRI'SANT, sĭk-ā-trĭ'zănt. n. s. [from cicatrice.] An application that induces a cicatrice.

CICATRI'SIVE, sĭk-ā-trĭ'sĭv.[158 428] adj. [from cicatrice.] Having the qualities proper to induce a cicatrice.

CICATRIZA'TION, sĭk-ā-trē-zā'shŭn. n. s. [from cicatrice.]

1. The act of healing the wound.

A vein bursted, or corroded in the lungs, is looked upon to be for the most part incurable, because of the motion and coughing of the lungs tearing the gap wider, and hindering the conglutination and cicatrization of the vein. Harvey.

2. The state of being healed, or skinned over.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp's Surgery.

To CI'CATRIZE, sĭk'ā-trize. v. a. [from cicatrix.]

1. To apply such medicines to wounds, or ulcers, as heal and skin them over. Quincy.

2. To heal and induce the skin over a sore.

We incarned, and in a few days cicatrized it with a smooth cicatrix. Wiseman on Tumours.

CI'CELY, sĭs'lē. n. s. [myrrhis.] A sort of herb.

CICHORA'CEOUS, sĭk-ō-rā'shŭs. adj. [from cichorium, Lat.] Having the qualities of succory.

Diureticks evacuate the salt serum; as all acid diureticks, and the testaceous and bitter cichoraceous plants. Floyer.

CICH'-PEASE, shĭk'pēze. n. s. [cicer.] A plant.

To CI'CURATE, sĭk'ū-rāte.[91 503] v. a. [cicuro, Lat.] To tame; to reclaim from wildness; to make tame and tractable.

Poisons may yet retain some portion of their natures; yet are so refracted, cicurated, and subdued, as not to make good their destructive malignities. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CICURA'TION, sĭk-ū-rā'shŭn. n. s. [from cicurate.] The act of taming or reclaiming from wildness.

This holds not only in domestick and mansuete birds, for then it might be the effect of cicuration or institution, but in the wild. Ray on the Creation.

CI'DER, sī'dŭr. n. s. [cidre, Fr. sidra, Ital. sicera, Lat. σίκερα, שכר.]

1. All kind of strong liquors, except wine. This sense is now wholly obsolete.

2. Liquor made of the juice of fruit pressed.

We had also drink, wholesome and good wine of the grape, a kind of cider made of a fruit of that country; a wonderful pleasing and refreshing drink. Bacon.

3. The juice of apples expressed and fermented. This is now the sense.

To the utmost bounds of this
Wide universe Silurian cider born,
Shall please all tastes, and triumph o'er the vine. Philips.

CI'DERIST, sī'dŭr-ĭst.[98] n. s. [from cider.] A maker of cider.

When the ciderists have taken care for the best fruit, and ordered them after the best manner they could, yet hath their cider generally proved pale, sharp, and ill tasted. Mortimer.

CI'DERKIN, sī'dŭr-kĭn. n. s. [from cider.] A low word used for the liquor made of the murk or gross matter of apples, after the cider is pressed out, and a convenient quantity of boiled water added to it; the whole infusing for about forty-eight hours. Phillips's World of Words.

Ciderkin is made for common drinking, and supplies the place of small beer. Mortimer.

CIELING, sē'lĭng. n. s. See CEILING.

CIERGE, sē-ārje'. n. s. [French.] A candle carried in processions.

CI'LIARY, sĭl'yā-rē.[113] adj. [cilium, Lat.] Belonging to the eyelids.

The ciliary processes, or rather the ligaments, observed in the inside of the sclerotick tunicles of the eye, do serve instead of a muscle, by the contraction, to alter the figure of the eye. Ray on the Creation.

CILI'CIOUS, sē-lĭsh'ŭs[314] adj. [from cilicium haircloth, Lat.] Made of hair.

A garment of camel's hair, that is, made of some texture of that hair; a coarse garment, a cilicious or sackcloth habit, suitable to the austerity of his life. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CIMA'R, sē-mār. See SIMAR.

CIME'LIARCH, sĭ-mē'lē-ārk. n. s. [from κειμηλιαρχης.] The chief keeper of plate, vestments, and things of value, belonging to a church; a church-warden. Dict.

CI'METER, sĭm'ē-tŭr.[98] n. s. [cimitarra, Span. and Portug. from chimeteir, Turkish. Bluteau's Portuguese Dict.] A sort of sword used by the Turks, short, heavy, and recurvated, or bent backward. This word is sometimes erroneously spelt scimitar, and scymiter; as in the following examples.

By this scimitar,
That slew the sophy and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of sultan Solyman. Shaksp.
Our armours now may rust, our idle scymiters
Hang by our sides for ornament, not use. Dryden.

CI'NCTURE, sĭnk'tshŭre.[461] n. s. [cinctura, Lat.]

1. Something worn round the body.

Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture
Hold out this tempest. Shakspeare.
Columbus found th' American so girt
With feather'd cincture, naked else, and wild. Milton.
He binds the sacred cincture round his breast. Pope.

2. An inclosure.

The court and prison being within the cincture of one wall. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. [In architecture.] A ring or list at the top and bottom of the shaft of a column; separating the shaft at one end from the base, at the other from the capital. It is supposed to be in imitation of the girths or ferrils anciently used to strengthen and preserve the primitive wood columns. Chambers.

CI'NDER, sĭn'dŭr.[98] n. s. [cendre, Fr. from cineres, Lat.]

1. A mass ignited and quenched, without being reduced to ashes.

I should make very forges of my cheeks,
That would to cinders burn up modesty,
Did I but speak thy deeds! Shakspeare.

There is in smith's cinders, by some adhesion of iron, sometimes to be found a magnetical operation. Brown.

So snow on Ætna does unmelted lie,
Whose rolling flames and scatter'd cinders fly. Waller.

2. A hot coal that has ceas'd to flame.

If from adown the hopeful chops
The fat upon a cinder drops,
To stinking smoke it turns the flame. Swift.

CINDER-WENCH, sĭn'dŭr-wĕnsh. CINDER-WOMAN, sĭn'dŭr-wŭm-ŭn. n. s. [cinder and woman.] A woman whose trade is to rake in heaps of ashes for cinders.

'Tis under so much nasty rubbish laid,
To find it out's the cinderwoman's trade. Essay on Satire.

She had about five hundred suits of fine cloaths, and yet went abroad like a cinder-wench. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

In the black form of cinder-wench she came,
When love, the hour, the place had banish'd shame. Gay.

CINERA'TION, sĭn-ē-rā'shŭn. n. s. [from cineres, Lat.] The reduction of any thing by fire to ashes. A term of chymistry.

CINERI'TIOUS, sĭn-ē-rĭsh'ŭs. adj. [cineritius, Lat.] Having the form or state of ashes.

The nerves arise from the glands of the cineritious part of the brain, and are terminated in all parts of the body. Cheyne.

CI'NNABAR, sĭn'nā-bār.[166] n. s. [cinnabaris, Lat.] Cinnabar is native or factitious: the factitious cinnabar is called vermillion.

Cinnabar is the ore out of which quicksilver is drawn, and consists partly of a mercurial, and partly of a sulphureo-ochreous matter. Woodward's Met. Fossils.

The particles of mercury uniting with the particles of sulphur, compose cinnabar. Newton's Opt.

CINNABAR of Antimony, sĭn'nā-bār.[166] is made of mercury, sulphur, and crude antimony.

CI'NNAMON, sĭn'nā-mŭn.[166] n. s. [cinnamomum, Lat.] The fragrant bark of a low tree in the island of Ceylon. Its leaves resemble those of the olive, both as to substance and colour. The fruit resembles an acorn or olive, and has neither the smell nor taste of the bark. When boiled in water; it yields an oil, which, as it cools and hardens, becomes as firm and white as tallow; the smell of which is agreeable in candles. The cinnamon of the ancients was different from ours. Chambers.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet amomum boast.
Dryden's Fables.

CINNAMON Water, sĭn'nâ-mŭn. is made by distilling the bark, first infused in barley water, in spirit of wine or white wine. Chambers.

CINQUE, sĭnk.[415] n. s. [French.] A five. It is used in games alone; but is often compounded with other words.

CINQUE-FOIL, sĭnk'fŏil. n. s. [cinquefeuille, Fr.] A kind of five-leaved clover.

CINQUE-PACE, sĭnk'pâse. n. s. [cinque pas, Fr.] A kind of grave dance.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace. The first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly and modest, as a measure full of state and gravity; and then comes repentance; and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sinks into the grave. Shakspeare.

CINQUE-PORTS, sĭnk'pŏrts. n. s. [cinque ports, Fr.]

Those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought most vigilantly to be observed against invasion. In which respect, the places where they are have a special governour or keeper, called by his office Lord Warden of the cinque ports; and divers privileges granted to them, as a particular jurisdiction; their warden having the authority of an admiral among them, and sending out writs in his own name. The cinque ports are Dover, Sandwich, Rye, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rumney, and Hithe; some of which, as the number exceeds five, must either be added to the first institution by some later grant, or accounted as appendants to some of the rest. Cowell.

They, that bear,
The cloth of state above her, are four barons of the cinque ports. Shakspeare.

CINQUE-SPOTTED, sĭnk'spŏt-tĕd. adj. Having five spots.

On her left breast
A mole, cinque spotted, like the crimson drops
I' th' bottom of a cowslip. Shakspeare.

CI'ON, sī'ŭn.[166] n. s. [sion, or scion, Fr.]

1. A sprout; a shoot from a plant.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this, that you call love, to be a sect or scion. Shaksp.

The stately Caledonian oak, newly settled in his triumphant throne, begirt with cions of his own royal stem. Howel.

2. The shoot engrafted or inserted on a stock.

The cion over-ruleth the stock; and the stock is but passive, and giveth aliment, but no motion, to the graft. Bacon.

CI'PHER, sī'fûr.[98] n. s. [chifre, Fr. zifra, Ital. cifra, low Lat. from an oriental root.]

1. An arithmetical character, by which some number is noted; a figure.

2. An arithmetical mark, which standing for nothing itself, increases the value of the other figures.

Mine were the very cipher of a function,
To find the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor. Shaksp.

If the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

As, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so names pass for things. South.

3. An intermixture of letters engraved usually on boxes or plate.

Troy flam'd in burnished gold; and o'er the throne,
ARMS AND THE MAN in golden ciphers shone. Pope.

Some mingling stir the melted tar, and some Deep on the new-shorn vagrant's heaving side
To stamp the master's cipher ready stand. Thomson.

4. A character in general.

In succeeding times this wisdom began to be written in ciphers and characters, and letters bearing the form of creatures. Raleigh's History of the World.

5. A secret or occult manner of writing, or the key to it.

This book, as long liv'd as the elements,
In cipher writ, or new-made idioms. Donne.

He was pleased to command me to stay at London, to send and receive all his letters; and I was furnished with mine several ciphers, in order to it. Denham.

To CI'PHER, sī'fûr.[98] v. n. [from the noun.] To practise arithmetick.

You have been bred to business; you can cipher: I wonder you never used your pen and ink. Arbuthnot.

To CI'PHER, sī'fûr. v. a. To write in occult characters.

He frequented sermons; and penned notes: his notes he ciphered with Greek characters. Hayward.

To CI'RCINATE, sĕr'sĕ-nâte. v. a. [circino, Lat.] To make a circle; to compass round, or turn round. Bailey.

CIRCINA'TION, sĕr-sĕ-nā'shŭn. n. s. [circinatio, Lat.] An orbicular motion; a turning round; a measuring with the compasses. Bailey

CI'RCLE, sĕr'kl.[108 405] n. s. [circulus, Lat.]

1. A line continued till it ends where it begun, having all its parts equidistant from a common centre.

Any thing that moves round about in a circle, in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move; but seems to be a perfect intire circle of that matter, or colour, and not a part of a circle in motion. Locke.

By a circle I understand not here perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth; and which, as to sense, may seem circular. Newton's Optics.

Then a deeper still,
In circle following circle, gathers round
To close the face of things. Thomson's Summer.

2. The space included in a circular line.

3. A round body; an orb.

It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth. Isaiah.

4. Compass; enclosure.

A great magician,
Obscured in the circle of the forest. Shakspeare.

5. An assembly surrounding the principal person.

To have a box where eunuchs sing,
And, foremost in the circle, eye a king.
Pope's Horace.

6. A company; an assembly.

I will call over to him the whole circle of beauties that are disposed among the boxes. Addison.

Ever since that time, Lisander visits in every circle. Tatler.

7. Any series ending as it begins, and perpetually repeated.

There be fruit trees in hot countries, which have blossoms and young fruit, and young fruit and ripe fruit, almost all the year, succeeding one another; but this circle of ripening cannot be but in succulent plants, and hot countries. Bacon.

Thus in a circle runs the peasant's pain,
And the year rolls within itself again. Dryd. Virg.

8. An inconclusive form of argument, in which the foregoing proposition is proved by the following, and the following proposition inferred from the foregoing.

That heavy bodies descend by gravity; and again, that gravity is a quality whereby an heavy body descends, is an impertinent circle, and teacheth nothing. Glanville's Scepsis.

That fallacy called a circle, is when one of the premises in a syllogism is questioned and opposed, and we intend to prove it by the conclusion. Watts.

9. Circumlocution; indirect form of words.

Has he given the lye
In circle or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel? You must challenge him.
Fletcher's Queen of Corinth.

10. Circles of the German Empire. Such provinces and principalities as have a right to be present at diets. They are in number ten. Trevoux.

To CI'RCLE, sĕr'kl. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To move round any thing.

The lords, that were appointed to circle the hill, had some days before planted themselves in places convenient. Bacon.

Another Cynthia her new journey runs,
And other planets circle other suns. Pope's Dunciad.

2. To enclose; to surround.

What stern ungentle hands
Have lopp'd and hew'd, and made the body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments,
Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in? Shakspeare.

While these fond arms, thus circling you, may prove
More heavy chains than those of hopeless love.
Prior.

Unseen, he glided thro' the joyous crowd,
With darkness circled and an ambient cloud. Pope.

3. To CI'RCLE in. To confine; to keep together.

We term those things dry which have a consistence within themselves, and which, to enjoy a determinate figure, do not require the stop or hindrance of another body to limit and circle them in. Digby on Bodies.

To CI'RCLE, sĕr'kl. v. n. To move circularly; to end where it begins.

The well fraught bowl
Circles incessant; whilst the humble cell
With quavering laugh and rural jests resounds.
Philips.

Now the circling years disclose
The day predestin'd to reward his woes. Pope.

CI'RCLED, sĕr'kld.[359] adj. [from circle.] Having the form of a circle; round.

Th' inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb. Shaksp.

CI'RCLET, sĕr'klĭt. n. s. [from circle.] A circle; an orb: properly a little circle.

Then take repast, till Hesperus display'd
His golden circlet in the western shade. Pope.

CI'RCLING, sĕr'klĭng. participial adj. [from To circle.] Having the form of a circle; circular; round.

Round he surveys, and well might, where he stood
So high above the circling canopy
Of night's extended shade. Milton's Par. Lost.

CI'RCUIT, sĕr'kĭt.[341 108] n. s. [circuit, Fr. circuitus, Lat.]

1. The act of moving round any thing.

There are four moons also perpetually rolling round the planet Jupiter, and carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts.

2. The space enclosed in a circle.

He led me up
A woody mountain, whose high top was plain,
A circuit wide inclos'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Space; extent, measured by travelling round.

He attributeth unto it smallness, in respect of circuit. Hooker.

The lake of Bolsena is reckoned one-and-twenty miles in circuit. Addison on Italy.

4. A ring; a diadem; that by which any thing is encircled.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this mad-brain'd flaw. Shaks.

5. The visitations of the judges for holding assises.

The circuits, in former times, went but round about the pale; as the circuit of the cynosura about the pole. Davies.

6. The tract of country visited by the judges.

7. Long deduction of reason.

Up into the watch tower get,
And see all things despoil'd of fallacies;
Thou shalt not peep thro' lattices of eyes,
Nor hear thro' labyrinths of ears, nor learn
By circuit or collections to discern. Donne.

CIRCUIT, of action, sĕr'kĭt. [In law.] Is a longer course of proceeding to recover the thing sued for than is needful. Cowell.

To CI'RCUIT, sĕr'kĭt. v. n. [from the noun.] To move circularly.

Pining with equinoctial heat, unless
The cordial cup perpetual motion keep,
Quick circuiting. Philips.

CIRCUITE'ER, sĕr'kĭt-tēr. n. s. [from circuit.] One that travels a circuit.

Like your fellow circuiteer, the sun, you travel the round of the earth, and behold all the iniquities under the heavens. Pope.

CIRCUI'TION, sĕr-kŭ-ĭsh'ŭn. n. s. [circuitio, Lat.]

1. The act of going round any thing.

2. Compass; maze of argument.

To apprehend by what degrees they lean to things in show, though not in deed, repugnant one to another, requireth more sharpness of wit, more intricate circuition of discourse, and depth of judgment, than common ability doth yield. Hooker.

CI'RCULAR, sĕr'kŭ-lŭr.[88] [418] adj. [circularis, Lat.]

1. Round, like a circle; circumscribed by a circle.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular. Fairy Queen.

He first inclos'd for lists a level ground;
The form was circular. Dryden's Fables.

Nero's port, composed of huge moles running round it in a kind of circular figure. Addison on Italy.

2. Successive in order; always returning.

From whence th' innumerable race of things
By circular successive order springs. Roscommon.

3. Vulgar; mean; circumforaneous.

Had Virgil been a circular poet, and closely adhered to history, how could the Romans have had Dido? Dennis.

4. Ending in itself: used of a paralogism, where the second proposition at once proves the first, and is proved by it.

One of Cartes's first principles of reasoning, after he had doubted of every thing seems to be too circular to safely build upon; for he is for proving the being of God from the truth of our faculties, and the truth of our faculties from the being of a God. Baker's Reflect. on Learning.

5. Circular Letter. A letter directed to several persons, who have the same interest in some common affair; as in the convocation of assemblies.

6. Circular Lines. Such straight lines as are divided from the divisions made in the arch of a circle; as the lines of sines, tangents, and secants, on the plain scale and sector.

7. Circular Sailing, is that performed on the arch of a great circle.

CIRCULA'RITY, sĕr-kŭ-lăr'ĕ-tē. n. s. [from circular.] A circular form.

The heavens have no diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts, and equiformity in motion, continually succeeding each other; so that, from what point soever we compute, the account will be common unto the whole circularity. Brown.

CI'RCULARLY, sĕr'kŭ-lăr-lē. adv. [from circular.]

1. In form of a circle.

The internal form of it consists of several regions, involving one another like orbs about the same centre; or of the several elements cast circularly about each other. Burnet.

2 With a circular motion.

Trade, which, like blood, should circularly flow,
Stopp'd in their channels, found its freedom lost. Dryden.

Every body, moved circularly about any centre, recedes, or endeavours, to recede, from that centre of its motion. Ray.

To CIR'CULATE, sĕr'kŭ-lāte. v. n. [from circulus.]

1. To move in a circle; to run round; to return to the place whence it departed in a constant course.

If our lives' motions theirs must imitate,
Our knowledge like our blood must circulate.
Denham.

Nature is a perpetual motion; and the work of the universe circulates without any interval or repose. L'Estrange.

2. To be dispersed.

As the mints of calumny are perpetually at work, a great number of curious inventions, issued out from time to time, grow current among the party, and circulate through the whole kingdom. Addison.

To CI'RCULATE, sĕr'kŭ-lāte. v. a. To put about.

In the civil wars, the money spent on both sides was circulated at home; no publick debts contracted. Swift.

CIRCULA'TION, sĕr-kŭ-lā'shŭn. n. s. [from circulate.]

1. Motion in a circle; a course in which the motion tends to the point from which it began.

What more obvious, one would think, than the circulation of the blood, unknown till the last age? Burnet's Theory.

As much blood passeth through the lungs as through all the rest of the body: the circulation is quicker, and heat greater, and their texture extremely delicate. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A series in which the same order is always observed, and things always return to the same state.

As for the sins of peace, thou hast brought upon us the miseries of war; so for the sins of war, thou seest fit to deny us the blessing of peace, and to keep us in a circulation of miseries. King Charles.

God, by the ordinary rule of nature, permits this continual circulation of human things. Swift.

3. A reciprocal interchange of meaning.

When the apostle saith of the Jews, that they crucified the Lord of glory; and when the Son of man, being on earth, affirmeth that the son of man was in heaven at the same instant, there is in these two speeches that mutual circulation before mentioned. Hooker.

CI'RCULATORY, sĕr'kŭ-lā-tŭr-ē. n. s. [from circulate.] A chymical vessel, in which that which rises from the vessel on the fire is collected and cooled in another fixed upon it, and falls down again.

CI'RCULATORY, sĕr'kŭ-lā-tŭr-ē. adj. [from circulate.] Circulatory Letters are the same with CIRCULAR Letters.

CIRCUMA'MBIENCY, sĕr-kŭm-ăm'bē-ĕn-sē. n. s. [from circumambient.] The act of encompassing.

Ice receiveth its figure according unto the surface it concreteth or the circumambiency which conformeth it. Brown.

CIRCUMA'MBIENT, sĕr-kŭm-ăm'bē-ĕnt. adj. [circum and ambio, Lat.] Surrounding; encompassing; enclosing.

The circumambient coldness towards the sides of the vessel, like the second region, cooling and condensing of it. Wilkins.

To CIRCUMA'MBULATE, sĕr-kŭm-ăm'bŭ-lāte.[91] v. n. [from circum and ambulo, Lat.] To walk round about. Dict.

To CI'RCUMCISE, sĕr'kŭm-sīze v. a. circumcido, Latin.] To cut the prepuce or foreskin, according to the law given to the Jews.

They came to circumcise the child. Luke.

One is alarmed at the industry of the whigs, in aiming to strengthen their routed party by a reinforcement from the circumcised. Swift's Exam.

CIRCUMCI'SION, sĕr-kŭm-sĭzh'ŭn. n. s. [from circumcise.] The rite or act of cutting off the foreskin.

They left a race behind
Like to themselves, distinguishable scarce
From Gentiles, but by circumcision vain. Milton.

To CIRCUMDU'CT, sĕr-kŭm-dŭkt'. v. a. [circumduco, Lat.] To contravene; to nullify: a term of civil law.

Acts of judicature may be cancelled and circumducted by the will and direction of the judge; as also by the consent of the parties litigant, before the judge has pronounced and given sentence. Ayliffe.

CIRCUMDU'CTION, sĕr-kŭm-dŭk'shŭn. n. s. [from circumduct.]

1. Nullification; cancellation.

The citation may be circumducted, though the defendant should not appear; and the defendant must be cited, as a circumduction requires. Ayliffe.

2. A leading about.

By long circumduction perhaps any truth may be derived from any other truth. Hooker.

CIRCU'MFERENCE, sĕr-kŭm'fĕ'rĕnse. n. s. [circumferentia, Lat.]

1. The periphery; the line including and surrounding any thing.

Extend thus far thy bounds,
This be thy just circumference, O world! Milton.

Because the hero is the centre of the main action, all the lines from the circumference tend to him alone. Dryden.

To CLASH, klåsh. v. n. [kletsen, Dut. to make a noise.]

1. To make a noise by mutual collision; to strike one against another.

Three times, as of the clashing sound
Of arms, we heard. Denham.

Those few that should happen to clash, might rebound after the collision. Bentley.

How many candles may send out their light, without clashing upon one another! which argues the smallness of the parts of light, and the largeness of the interstices between particles of air and other bodies. Cheyne.

2. To act with opposite power, or contrary direction.

Neither was there any queen-mother who might clash with his counsellors for authority. Bacon.

Those that are not convinced what help this is to magistracy, would find it, if they should chance to clash. South.

3. To contradict; to oppose.

Wherever there are men, there will be clashing some time or other; and a knock, or a contest, spoils all. L'Estrange.

The absurdity in this instance is obvious; and yet every time that clashing metaphors are put together, this fault is committed. Spectator.

To CLASH, klåsh. v. a. To strike one thing against another, so as to produce a noise.

The nodding statue clash'd his arms,
And with a sullen sound, and feeble cry,
Half sunk, and half pronounc'd the word of victory. Dryden.

CLASH, klåsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A noisy collision of two bodies.

The clash of arms and voice of men we hear. Denham.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

2. It may be perhaps sometimes used for a dependant in a more general sense, as it was used among the Romans.

I do think they are your friends and clients,
And fearful to disturb you. Ben Jonson.

CLI'ENTED, kli'ên-têd. particip. adj. [from client.] Supplied with clients.

This due occasion of discouragement, the worst conditioned and least cliented petivoguers do yet, under the sweet bait of revenge, convert to a more plentiful prosecution of actions.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CLIENTE'LE, kli-ên-tèle'. n. s. [clientela, Lat.] The condition or office of a client. A word scarcely used.

There's Varus holds good quarters with him;
And, under the pretext of clientele,
Will be admitted. Ben Jonson.

CLI'ENTSHIP, kli'ênt-ship. n. s. [from client.] The condition of a client.

Patronage and clientship among the Romans always descended; the plebeian houses had recourse to the patrician line which had formerly protected them. Dryden.

CLIFF, klif. n. s. [clivus, Lat. clıꝑ, cliof, Sax.]

1. A steep rock; a rock, according to Skinner, broken and craggy. [rupes.]

The Leucadians did use to precipitate a man from a high cliff into the sea. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Mountaineers, that from Severus came,
And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden.

Wherever 'tis so found scattered upon the shores, there is it as constantly found lodged in the cliffs thereabouts. Woodward.

2. The name of a character in musick. Properly CLEF.

CLIFT, klift. n. s. The same with CLIFF. Now disused.

Down he tumbled, like an aged tree,
High growing on the top of rocky clift. Spenser.

CLIMA'CTER, kli-mâk'tûr.[122] n. s. [χλιμακτηρ.] A certain space of time, or progression of years, which is supposed to end in a critical and dangerous time.

Elder times, settling their conceits upon climacters, differ from one another.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CLIMACT'ERICK, klîm-âk-têr'rik.[530] } adj.
CLIMACTE'RICAL, klîm-âk-têr'rè-kâl. } from climacter.] Containing a certain number of years, at the end of which some great change is supposed to befal the body.

Certain observable years are supposed to be attended with some considerable changes in the body; as the seventh year; the twenty-first, made up of three times seven; the forty-ninth, made up of seven times seven; the sixty-third, being nine times seven; and the eighty-first, which is nine times nine: which two last are called the grand climactericks.

The numbers seven and nine, multiplied into themselves, do make up sixty-three, commonly esteemed the great climacterical of our lives.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Your lordship being now arrived at your great climacterique, yet give no proof of the least dec y of your excellent judgment and comprehension.
Dryden.

My mother is something better, though at her advanced age, every day is a climacterick. Pope.

CLI'MATE, kli'mâte.[91] n. s. [κλίμα.]

1. A space upon the surface of the earth, measured from the equator to the polar circles; in each of which spaces the longest day is half an hour longer than in that nearer to the equator. From the polar circles to the poles, climates are measured by the increase of a month.

2. In the common and popular sense, a region, or tract of land, differing from another by the temperature of the air.

Betwixt th' extremes, two happier climates hold
The temper that partakes of hot and cold Dryd.
On what new happy climate are we thrown?
Dryden.
This talent of moving the passions cannot be of any great use in the northern climates. Swift.

To CLI'MATE, kli'mêt. v. n. To inhabit. A word only in Shakspeare.

The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our air, whilst you
Do climate here. Shakspeare.

CLI'MATURE, kli'mâ-tshûre.[463] n. s. The same with CLIMATE. Not in use.

Such harbingers preceding still the fates,
Have heav'n and earth together demonstrated
Unto our climatures and countrymen. Shakspeare.

CLI'MAX, kli'mâks. n. s. [κλίμαξ.] Gradation; ascent: a figure in rhetorick, by which the sentence rises gradually; as Cicero says to Catiline. Thou do'st nothing, movest nothing, thinkest nothing; but I hear it, I see it, and perfectly understand it.

Choice between one excellency and another is difficult; and yet the conclusion, by a due climax, is evermore the best. Dryden's Juv. Dedication.
Some radiant Richmond every age has grac'd,
Still rising in a climax, till the last,
Surpassing all, is not to be surpast. Granville.

To CLIMB, klîme. v. n. pret. clomb or climbed; part. clomb or climbed. [climan, Sax. klimmen, Dut.] To ascend up any place; to mount by means of some hold or footing. It implies labour and difficulty, and successive efforts.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire.
Shakspeare.
When shall I come to th' top of that same hill?—
—You do climb up it now. Look, how we labour.
Shakspeare.
Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet. 1 Sam.
As a thief
Into the window climbs, or o'er the tiles,
So clomb the first grand thief into God's fold. Milt.
Thou sun! of this great world both eye and soul,
Acknowledge him thy greater; sound his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton's Paradise Lost.
No rebel Titan's sacrilegious crime,
By heaping hills on hills, can thither climb.
Roscommon.
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
Dryden.
What controuling cause
Makes waters, in contempt of nature's laws,
Climb up, and gain th' aspiring mountain's height?
Blackmore.

To CLIMB, klîme. v. a. To ascend; to mount.

Is 't not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls, in spite of me the owner? Shak.
Thy arms pursue
Paths of renown, and climb ascents of fame. Prior.
Forlorn he must and persecuted fly;
Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

CLI'MBER, kli'mûr. n. s. [from climb.]

1. One that mounts or scales any place or thing; a mounter; a riser.

I wait not at the lawyer's gates,
Ne shoulder climbers down the stairs. Carew's Surv.
Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shaksp.

2. A plant that creeps upon other supports.

Ivy, briony, honey-suckles, and other climbers, must be dug up. Mortimer.

3. The name of a particular herb.

The seeds are gathered into a little head, ending in a kind of rough plume; whence it is called by the country people old man's beard. Miller.

To CLI'MBER, kli'mûr. v. n. [from clamber.] To mount with effort; to climb.

In scaling the youngest to pluck off his becke,
Beware how ye climber for breaking your neck.
Tusser.

CLIME, klîme, n. s. [contracted from climate, and therefore properly poetical. Climate; region; tract of earth.

He can spread thy name o'er land and seas,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.
Milton.
They apply the celestial description of other climes unto their own. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
Of beauty, sing, her shining progress view,
From clime to clime the dazzling light pursue.
Granville.
We shall meet
In happier climes, and on a safer shore. Addison.
Health to vigorous bodies, or fruitful seasons in temperate climes, are common and familiar blessings. Atterbury.

To CLINCH, klînsh. v. a. [clýnga, Sax. to knock, Junius; clingo, in Festus, to encompass, Minshew.]

1. To hold in the hand with the fingers bent over it.

Simois rowls the bodies and the shields
Of heroes, whose dismember'd hands yet bear
The dart aloft, and clinch the pointed spear. Dryd.

2. To contract or double the fingers.

Their tallest trees are about seven feet high, the tops whereof I could but just reach with my fist clinch'd. Swift.

3. To bend the point of a nail on the other side.

4. To confirm; to fix: as, to clinch an argument.

CLINCH, klînsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A word used in a double meaning; a pun; an ambiguity; a duplicity of meaning, with an identity of expression. How it obtains this meaning is difficult to find. A nail caught on the other side, and doubled, is a nail clinched: a word taken in a different meaning, and doubled in sense, is likewise a clinch.

Such as they are, I hope they will prove, without a clinch, luciferous; searching after the nature of light. Boyle.
Pure clinches the suburbian muse affords,
And Panton waging harmless war with words. Dryd.
Here one poor word a hundred clinches makes.
Pope.

2. That part of the cable which is fastened to the ring of the anchor.

CLI'NCHER, klînsh'ûr.[98] n. s. [from clinch.] A cramp; a holdfast; a piece of iron bent down to fasten planks.

The wimbles for the work Calypso found;
With those he pierc'd 'em, and with clinchers bound.
Pope.

To CLING, kling. v. n. pret. I clung; part. I have clung. [klynger, Danish.]

1. To hang upon by twining round; to stick to; to hold fast upon.

The broil long doubtful stood;
As two spent swimmers that do cling together,
And choak their art. Shakspeare.
The fontanel in his neck was described by the clinging of his hair to the plaster. Wiseman's Surg.
When they united and together clung,
When undistinguish'd in one heap they hung.
Blackmore.
See in the circle next Eliza plac'd,
Two babes of love close clinging to her waist. Pope.
That they may the closer cling,
Take your blue ribbon for a string. Swift.

2. To adhere, as followers or friends.

Most popular consul he is grown, methinks:
How the rout cling to him! Ben Jonson's Cataline.

3. To dry up; to consume; to waste; to pine away. [Leclungen cneop a withered tree.]

If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling thee. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

CLI'NGY, kling'é. adj. [from cling.] Apt to cling; adhesive.

CLI'NICAL, klin'é-kâl. } adj. [κλίνω to lie
CLI'NICK, klin'ik. } down.] Those that keep their beds; those that are sick, past hopes of recovery. A clinical lecture is a discourse upon a disease, made by the bed of the patient.

A clinical convert, one that is converted on his death-bed. This word occurs often in the works of Taylor.

To CLINK, klînk. v. a. [perhaps softened from clank, or corrupted from click.] To strike so as to make a small sharp noise.

Five years! a long lease for the clinking of pewter. Shakspeare.

To CLINK, klînk. v. n. To utter a small, sharp, interrupted noise.

The sever'd bars
Submissive clink against your brazen portals. Prior.
Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe thro' the wet on clinking pattens tread. Gay.

CLINK, klînk. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sharp successive noise; a knocking.

I heard the clink and fall of swords. Shakspeare.

2. It seems in Spenser to have some unusual sense. I believe the knocker of a door.

Tho' creeping close, behind the wicket's clink,
Privily he peeped out thro' a chink. Spenser.

CLI'NQUANT, klînk'ânt. adj. [Fr.] Dressed in embroidery, in spangles, false glitter, tinsel finery.

To-day the French,
All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English. Shakspeare.

To CLIP, klîp. v. a. [clippan, Sax.]

1. To embrace, by throwing the arms round; to hug; to enfold in the arms.

He that before shunn'd her, to shun such harms,
Now runs and takes her in his clipping arms. Sidney.
Here I clip
The anvil of my sword, and do contest
Hotly and nobly with thy love. Shakspeare.
O nation, that thou couldst remove
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about.
Shakspeare.
Enter the city; clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your feats. Shakspeare.
The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,

Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings,
Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare.
The male resteth on the back of the female, clipping and embracing her with his legs about the neck and body. Ray.

2. To cut with sheers. [klipper, Danish; klipper'n, Dutch; apparently from the same radical sense, since sheers cut by inclosing and embracing.]
Your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings, that already is flown away. Sidney.
Then let him, that my love shall blame,
Or clip love's wings, or quench love's flame.
Suckling.
He clips hope's wings, whose airy bliss
Much higher than fruition is. Denham.
But love had clipp'd his wings and cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court. Dryden.
If mankind had had wings, as perhaps some extravagant atheists may think us deficient in that, all the world must have consented to clip them. Bentley.
By this lock, this sacred lock, I swear,
Which never more shall join its parted hair,
Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew.
Pope.
He spent every day ten hours dozing, clipping papers, or darning his stockings. Swift.

3. Sometimes with off.
We should then have as much feeling upon the clipping off a hair, as the cutting of a nerve.
Bentley's Sermons.

4. It is particularly used of those who diminish coin, by paring the edges.
This design of new coinage, is just of the nature of clipping. Locke.

5. To curtail; to cut short.
All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clipt, but so. Shakspeare.
Mrs. Mayoress clipped the king's English. Addis.
Even in London, they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs. Swift.

6. To confine; to hold; to contain.
Where is he living, clipt in with the sea,
Who calls me pupil? Shakspeare.

To CLIP, klip. v. n. A phrase in falconry.
Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness the quarry miss'd,
Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind.
Dryden.

CLI'PPER, klip'pûr. n. s. [from clip.] One that debases coin by cutting.
It is no English treason to cut
French crowns, and to-morrow the king
Himself will be a clipper. Shakspeare.
No coins pleased some medallists more than those which had passed through the hands of an old Roman clipper. Addison.

CLI'PPING, klip'ping. n. s. [from clip.] The part cut or clipped off.
Beings purely material, without sense or thought, as the clippings of our beards, and pairings of our nails. Locke.

CLI'VER, kli'vûr. n. s. An herb. More properly written cleaver.
It grows wild, the seeds sticking to the clothes of such as pass by them. It is sometimes used in medicine. Miller.

CLOAK, klôke. n. s. [lach, Saxon.]
1. The outer garment, with which the rest are covered.
You may bear it
Under a cloke that is of any length. Shakspeare.
Their clokes were cloth of silver, mixed with gold. Dryden.
All arguments will be as little able to prevail, as the wind did with the traveller to part with his cloak, which he held only the faster. Locke.
Nimbly he rose, and cast his garment down;
That instant in his cloak I wrapt me round. Pope.

2. A concealment; a cover.
Not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness. Peter.

To CLOAK, klôke. v. a. [from the noun.]

CLO'CKWORK, klôk'wûrk. n. s. [from clock and work.] Movements by weights or springs, like those of a clock.
So if unprejudic'd you scan
The goings of this clockwork, man;
You find a hundred movements made
By fine devices in his head:
But 'tis the stomach's solid stroke,
That tells this being what 's o'clock. Prior.
Within this hollow was Vulcan's shop, full of fire and clockwork. Addison.
You look like a puppet moved by clockwork. Arbuthnot.

CLOD, klôd. n. s. [clud, Sax. a little hillock; klotte, Dutch.]
1. A lump of earth or clay; such a body of earth as cleaves or hangs together.
The earth that casteth up from the plough a great clod, is not so good as that which casteth up a smaller clod. Bacon.
I'll cut up, as plows
Do barren lands, and strike together flints
And clods, th' ungrateful senate and the people.
Ben Jonson.
Who smooths with harrows, or who pounds with rakes,
The crumbling clods. Dryden.

Nor taste the sacred Heliconian stream. Dryden.

CLEFT, klĕft. n. s. [from cleave.]

1. A space made by the separation of parts; a crack; a crevice.

The cascades seem to break through the clefts and cracks of rocks. Addison's Guardian.

The extremity of this cape has a long cleft in it, which was enlarged and cut into shape by Agrippa, who made this the great port for the Roman fleet. Addison on Italy.

The rest of it, being more gross and ponderous, does not move far; but lodges in the clefts, craggs, and sides of the rocks, near the bottoms of them. Woodward.

2. In farriery.

Clefts appear on the bought of the pasterns, and are caused by a sharp and malignant humour, which frets the skin; and it is accompanied with pain, and a noisome stench. Farrier's Dict.

His horse it is the herald's weft,
No, 'tis a mare, and hath a cleft. Ben Jonson.

To CLE'FTGRAFT, klĕft'grâft. v. a. [cleft and graft.] To engraft by cleaving the stock of a tree, and inserting a branch.

Filberts may be cleftgrafted on the common nut. Mortimer.

CLE'MENCY, klĕm'mĕn-sē. n. s. [clemence, Fr clementia, Lat.]

1. Mercy; remission of severity; willingness to spare; tenderness in punishing.

I have stated the true notion of clemency, mercy, compassion, good-nature, humanity, or whatever else it may be called, so far as is consistent with wisdom. Addison.

2. Mildness; softness.

Then in the clemency of upward air
We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder scar. Dryden.

CLE'MENT, klĕm'mĕnt. adj. [clemens, Lat.] Mild; gentle; merciful; kind; tender; compassionate.

You are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take a third,
Letting them thrive again on the abatement. Shaksp.

CLENCH, klĭnsh. See CLINCH.

To CLEPE, klēpe. v. a. [clýpian, Sax.] To call. Obsolete.

Three crabbed months had sowr'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clepe thyself my love. Shakspeare.

CLE'RGY, klêr'jè. n. s. [clergè, Fr. clerus, Lat. κληρὸς, Greek.] The body of men set apart by due ordination for the service of God.

We hold that God's clergy are a state which hath been, and will be as long as there is a church upon earth, necessary, by the plain word of God himself; a state whereunto the rest of God's people must be subject, as touching things that appertain to their soul's health. Hooker.

The convocation give a greater sum
Than ever, at one time, the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal. Shakspeare.

CLE'RGYMAN, klêr'jè-mân.[88] n. s. [clergy and man.] A man in holy orders; a man set apart for ministration of holy things; not a laick.

How I have sped among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express. Shaksp.

It seems to be in the power of a reasonable clergyman to make the most ignorant man comprehend his duty. Swift.

CLE'RICAL, klêr'è-kâl. adj. [clericus, Lat.] Relating to the clergy: as, a clerical man, a man in orders.

In clericals the keys are lined; and in colleges they use to line the table-men. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Unless we may more properly read clarichords.

CLERK, klârk.[100] n. s. [cleɼic, Sax. clericus, Latin.]

1. A clergyman.

All persons were stiled clerks, that served in the church of Christ, whether they were bishops, priests, or deacons. Ayliffe.

2. A scholar; a man of letters.

They might talk of book-learning what they would; but, for his part, he never saw more unfeaty fellows than great clerks were. Sidney.

The greatest clerks being not always the honestest, any more than the wisest, men. South.

3. A man employed under another as a writer.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge; and then the boy, his clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine.
Shakspeare.

My friend was in doubt whether he could not exert the justice upon such a vagrant; but not having his clerk with him, who is a necessary counsellor, he let the thought drop. Addison.

4. A petty writer in public offices; an officer of various kinds.

Take a just view, how many may remark,
Who's now a lord, his grandsire was a clerk.
Granville.

It may seem difficult to make out the bills of fare for the suppers of Vitellius. I question not but an expert clerk of a kitchen can do it. Arbuthnot.

5. The layman who reads the responses to the congregation in the church, to direct the rest.

CLE'RKSHIP, klârk'ship. n. s. [from clerk.]

1. Scholarship.

2. The office of a clerk of any kind.

He sold the clerkship of his parish, when it became vacant. Swift's Miscellanies.

CLIF, klîf. } ginning or end of the
CLIVE, klîv. } proper name of a place, denotes it to be situated on the side of a rock or hill; as Cleveland, Clifton, Stancliff.

CLE'VER, klêv'ûr.[98] adj. [of no certain etymology.]

1. Dexterous; skilful.

It was the cleverer mockery of the two. L'Estrange.

I read Dyer's letter more for the stile than the news. The man has a clever pen, it must be owned. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Just; fit; proper; commodious.

I can't but think't would sound more clever,
To me, and to my heirs for ever. Pope.

3. Well-shaped; handsome.

She called him gundy-guts, and he called her lousy Peg, though the girl was a tight clever wench as any was. Arbuthnot.

4. This is a low word, scarcely ever used but in burlesque or conversation; and applied to any thing a man likes, without a settled meaning.

CLE'VERLY, klêv'ûr-lè. adv. [from clever.] Dexterously; fitly; handsomely.

These would inveigle rats with th' scent,
And sometimes catch them with a snap,
As cleverly as th' ablest trap. Hudibras.

A rogue upon the highway may have as strong an arm, and take off a man's head as cleverly, as the executioner. South.

CLE'VERNESS, klêv'ûr-nês. n. s. [from clever.] Dexterity; skill; accomplishment.

CLEW, klû. n. s. [clyƿe, Sax. klouwen, Dutch.]

1. Thread wound upon a bottom; a ball of thread.

Eftsoons untwisting his deceitful clew,
He 'gan to weave a web of wicked guile. Spenser.

While, guided by some clew of heav'nly thread,
The perplex'd labyrinth we backward tread.
Roscommon.

They see small clews draw vastest weights along,
Not in their bulk, but in their order, strong. Dryd.

2. A guide; a direction: because men direct themselves by a clew of thread in a labyrinth.

This alphabet must be your own clew to guide you. Holder.

Is there no way, no thought, no beam of light?
No clew to guide me thro' this gloomy maze,
To clear my honour, yet preserve my faith? Smith.

The reader knows not how to transport his thoughts over to the next particular, for want of some clew, or connecting idea, to lay hold of.
Watts's Logick.

3. Clew of the sail of a ship, is the lower corner of it, which reaches down to that earing where the tackles and sheets are fastened. Harris.

To CLEW, klû. v. a. [from clew, a sea term.] To clew the sails, is to raise them, in order to be furled; which is done by a rope fastened to the clew of a sail, called the clew-garnet. Harris.

To CLICK, klîk. v. n. [cliken, Dutch; cliqueter, French; or perhaps the diminutive of clack.] To make a sharp, small, successive noise.

The solemn death-watch click'd, the hour she died;
And shrilling crickets in the chimney cried. Gay.

CLI'CKER, klîk'ûr. n. s. [from click.] A low word for the servant of a salesman, who stands at the door to invite customers.

CLI'CKET, klîk'ît. n. s. [from click.] The knocker of a door. Skinner.

CLI'ENT, klî'ênt. n. s. [cliens, Lat.]

1. One who applies to an advocate for counsel and defence.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are well handled; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel. Bacon's Essays.

Advocates must deal plainly with their clients, and tell the true state of their case.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

2. It may be perhaps sometimes used for a dependant in a more general sense, as it was used among the Romans.

I do think they are your friends and clients,
And fearful to disturb you. Ben Jonson.

CLI'ENTED, klî'ên-têd. particip. adj. [from client.] Supplied with clients.

This due occasion of discouragement, the worst conditioned and least clienled petivoguers do yet, under the sweet bait of revenge, convert to a more plentiful prosecution of actions.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CLIENTE'LE, klî-ên-têle'. n. s. [clientela, Lat.] The condition or office of a client. A word scarcely used.

There's Varus holds good quarters with him;
And, under the pretext of clientele,
Will be admitted. Ben Jonson.

CLI'ENTSHIP, klî'ênt-ship. n. s. [from client.] The condition of a client.

Patronage and clientship among the Romans always descended; the plebeian houses had recourse to the patrician line which had formerly protected them. Dryden.

CLIFF, klîf. n. s. [clivus, Lat. clıf, cliof, Sax.]

1. A steep rock; a rock, according to Skinner, broken and craggy. [rupes.]

The Leucadians did use to precipitate a man from a high cliff into the sea. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Mountaineers, that from Severus came,
And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden.

Wherever 'tis so found scattered upon the shores, there is it as constantly found lodged in the cliffs thereabouts. Woodward.

2. The name of a character in musick. Properly CLEF.

CLIFT, klîft. n. s. The same with CLIFF. Now disused.

Down he tumbled, like an aged tree,
High growing on the top of rocky clift. Spenser.

CLIMA'CTER, klî-mâk'tûr.[122] n. s. [κλιμακτηρ.] A certain space of time, or progression of years, which is supposed to end in a critical and dangerous time.

Elder times, settling their conceits upon climacters, differ from one another.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CLIMACT'ERICK, klîm-âk-têr'rîk.[530] } adj.
CLIMACTE'RICAL, klîm-âk-têr'rè-kâl. } from climacter.] Containing a certain number of years, at the end of which some great change is supposed to befal the body.

Certain observable years are supposed to be attended with some considerable changes in the body; as the seventh year; the twenty-first, made up of three times seven; the forty-ninth, made up of seven times seven; the sixty-third, being nine times seven; and the eighty-first, which is nine times nine: which two last are called the grand climactericks.

The numbers seven and nine, multiplied into themselves, do make up sixty-three, commonly esteemed the great climacterical of our lives.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Your lordship being now arrived at your great climacterique, yet give no proof of the least dec y of your excellent judgment and comprehension.
Dryden.

My mother is something better, though at her advanced age, every day is a climacterick. Pope.

CLI'MATE, klī'mâte.[91] n. s. [κλίμα.]

1. A space upon the surface of the earth, measured from the equator to the polar circles; in each of which spaces the longest day is half an hour longer than in that nearer to the equator. From the polar circles to the poles, climates are measured by the increase of a month.

2. In the common and popular sense, a region, or tract of land, differing from another by the temperature of the air.

Betwixt th' extremes, two happier climates hold
The temper that partakes of hot and cold Dryd.
On what new happy climate are we thrown?
Dryden.
This talent of moving the passions cannot be of any great use in the northern climates. Swift.

To CLI'MATE, klī'mêt. v. n. To inhabit. A word only in Shakspeare.

The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our air, whilst you
Do climate here. Shakspeare.

CLI'MATURE, klī'mâ-tshûre.[463] n. s. The same with CLIMATE. Not in use.

Such harbingers preceding still the fates,
Have heav'n and earth together demonstrated
Unto our climatures and countrymen. Shakspeare.

CLI'MAX, klī'mâks. n. s. [κλίμαξ.] Gradation; ascent: a figure in rhetorick, by which the sentence rises gradually; as Cicero says to Catiline. Thou do'st nothing, movest nothing, thinkest nothing; but I hear it, I see it, and perfectly understand it.

Choice between one excellency and another is difficult; and yet the conclusion, by a due climax, is evermore the best. Dryden's Juv. Dedication.
Some radiant Richmond every age has grac'd,
Still rising in a climax, till the last,
Surpassing all, is not to be surpast. Granville.

To CLIMB, klime. v. n. pret. clomb or climbed; part. clomb or climbed. [climan, Sax. klimmen, Dut.] To ascend up any place; to mount by means of some hold or footing. It implies labour and difficulty, and successive efforts.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire.
Shakspeare.
When shall I come to th' top of that same hill?—
—You do climb up it now. Look, how we labour.
Shakspeare.
Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet. 1 Sam.

As a thief
Into the window climbs, or o'er the tiles,
So clomb the first grand thief into God's fold. Milt.
Thou sun! of this great world both eye and soul,
Acknowledge him thy greater; sound his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton's Paradise Lost.
No rebel Titan's sacrilegious crime,
By heaping hills on hills, can thither climb.
Roscommon.
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
Dryden.

What controuling cause
Makes waters, in contempt of nature's laws,
Climb up, and gain th' aspiring mountain's height?
Blackmore.

To CLIMB, klime. v. a. To ascend; to mount.

Is 't not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls, in spite of me the owner? Shak.
Thy arms pursue
Paths of renown, and climb asceuts of fame. Prior.
Forlorn he must and persecuted fly;
Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

CLI'MBER, klī'mûr. n. s. [from climb.]

1. One that mounts or scales any place or thing; a mounter; a riser.

I wait not at the lawyer's gates,
Ne shoulder climbers down the stairs. Carew's Surv.
Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shaksp.

2. A plant that creeps upon other supports.

Ivy, briony, honey-suckles, and other climbers, must be dug up. Mortimer.

3. The name of a particular herb.

The seeds are gathered into a little head, ending in a kind of rough plume; whence it is called by the country people old man's beard. Miller.

To CLI'MBER, klī'mûr. v. n. [from clamber.] To mount with effort; to climb.

In scaling the youngest to pluck off his becke,
Beware how ye climber for breaking your neck.
Tusser.

CLIME, klime, n. s. [contracted from climate, and therefore properly poetical. Climate; region; tract of earth.

He can spread thy name o'er land and seas,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.
Milton.
They apply the celestial description of other climes unto their own. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
Of beauty, sing, her shining progress view,
From clime to clime the dazzling light pursue.
Granville.
We shall meet
In happier climes, and on a safer shore. Addison.
Health to vigorous bodies, or fruitful seasons in temperate climes, are common and familiar blessings. Atterbury.

To CLINCH, klinsh. v. a. [clynga, Sax. to knock, Junius; clingo, in Festus, to encompass, Minshew.]

1. To hold in the hand with the fingers bent over it.

Simois rowls the bodies and the shields
Of heroes, whose dismember'd hands yet bear
The dart aloft, and clinch the pointed spear. Dryd.

2. To contract or double the fingers.

Their tallest trees are about seven feet high, the tops whereof I could but just reach with my fist clinch'd. Swift.

3. To bend the point of a nail on the other side.

4. To confirm; to fix: as, to clinch an argument.

CLINCH, klinsh. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A word used in a double meaning; a pun; an ambiguity; a duplicity of meaning, with an identity of expression. How it obtains this meaning is difficult to find. A nail caught on the other side, and doubled, is a nail clinched: a word taken in a different meaning, and doubled in sense, is likewise a clinch.

Such as they are, I hope they will prove, without a clinch, luciferous; searching after the nature of light. Boyle.
Pure clinches the suburbian muse affords,
And Panton waging harmless war with words. Dryd.
Here one poor word a hundred clinches makes.
Pope.

2. That part of the cable which is fastened to the ring of the anchor.

CLI'NCHER, klinsh'ûr.[98] n. s. [from clinch.] A cramp; a holdfast; a piece of iron bent down to fasten planks.

The wimbles for the work Calypso found;
With those he pierc'd 'em, and with clinchers bound.
Pope.

To CLING, kling. v. n. pret. I clung; part. I have clung. [klynger, Danish.]

1. To hang upon by twining round; to stick to; to hold fast upon.

The broil long doubtful stood;
As two spent swimmers that do cling together,
And choak their art. Shakspeare.
The fontanel in his neck was described by the clinging of his hair to the plaster. Wiseman's Surg.
When they united and together clung,
When undistinguish'd in one heap they hung.
Blackmore.
See in the circle next Eliza plac'd,
Two babes of love close clinging to her waist. Pope.
That they may the closer cling,
Take your blue ribbon for a string. Swift.

2. To adhere, as followers or friends.

Most popular consul he is grown, methinks:
How the rout cling to him! Ben Jonson's Cataline.

3. To dry up; to consume; to waste; to pine away. [Geclungen þeop a withered tree.]

If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling thee. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

CLI'NGY, kling'ê. adj. [from cling.] Apt to cling; adhesive.

CLI'NICAL, klin'ê-kâl. } adj. [κλίνω to lie
CLI'NICK, klin'ik. } down.] Those that keep their beds; those that are sick, past hopes of recovery. A clinical lecture is a discourse upon a disease, made by the bed of the patient.

A clinical convert, one that is converted on his death-bed. This word occurs often in the works of Taylor.

To CLINK, klink. v. a. [perhaps softened from clank, or corrupted from click.] To strike so as to make a small sharp noise.

Five years! a long lease for the clinking of pewter. Shakspeare.

To CLINK, klink. v. n. To utter a small, sharp, interrupted noise.

The sever'd bars
Submissive clink against your brazen portals. Prior.
Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe thro' the wet on clinking pattens tread. Gay.

CLINK, klink. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sharp successive noise; a knocking.

I heard the clink and fall of swords. Shakspeare.

2. It seems in Spenser to have some unusual sense. I believe the knocker of a door.

Tho' creeping close, behind the wicket's clink,
Privily he peeped out thro' a chink. Spenser.

CLI'NQUANT, klink'ânt. adj. [Fr.] Dressed in embroidery, in spangles, false glitter, tinsel finery.

To-day the French,
All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English. Shakspeare.

To CLIP, klip. v. a. [clippan, Sax.]

1. To embrace, by throwing the arms round; to hug; to enfold in the arms.

He that before shunn'd her, to shun such harms,
Now runs and takes her in his clipping arms. Sidney.
Here I clip
The anvil of my sword, and do contest
Hotly and nobly with thy love. Shakspeare.
O nation, that thou couldst remove
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about.
Shakspeare.
Enter the city; clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your feats. Shakspeare.
The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,

Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings,
Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare.

The male resteth on the back of the female, clipping and embracing her with his legs about the neck and body. Ray.

2. To cut with sheers. [klipper, Danish; klippen, Dutch; apparently from the same radical sense, since sheers cut by inclosing and embracing.]

Your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings, that already is flown away. Sidney.

Then let him, that my love shall blame,
Or clip love's wings, or quench love's flame.
Suckling.

He clips hope's wings, whose airy bliss
Much higher than fruition is. Denham.

But love had clipp'd his wings and cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court. Dryden.

If mankind had had wings, as perhaps some extravagant atheists may think us deficient in that, all the world must have consented to clip them. Bentley.

By this lock, this sacred lock, I swear,
Which never more shall join its parted hair,
Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew.
Pope.

He spent every day ten hours dozing, clipping papers, or darning his stockings. Swift.

3. Sometimes with off.

We should then have as much feeling upon the clipping off a hair, as the cutting of a nerve.
Bentley's Sermons.

4. It is particularly used of those who diminish coin, by paring the edges.

This design of new coinage, is just of the nature of clipping. Locke.

5. To curtail; to cut short.

All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clipt, but so. Shakspeare.

Mrs. Mayoress clipped the king's English. Addis.

Even in London, they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs. Swift.

6. To confine; to hold; to contain.

Where is he living, clipt in with the sea,
Who calls me pupil? Shakspeare.

To CLIP, klip. v. n. A phrase in falconry.

Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness the quarry miss'd,
Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind.
Dryden.

CLI'PPER, klip'pûr. n. s. [from clip.] One that debases coin by cutting.

It is no English treason to cut
French crowns, and to-morrow the king
Himself will be a clipper. Shakspeare.

No coins pleased some medallists more than those which had passed through the hands of an old Roman clipper. Addison.

CLI'PPING, klip'ping. n. s. [from clip.] The part cut or clipped off.

Beings purely material, without sense or thought, as the clippings of our beards, and pairings of our nails. Locke.

CLI'VER, kli'vûr. n. s. An herb. More properly written cleaver.

It grows wild, the seeds sticking to the clothes of such as pass by them. It is sometimes used in medicine. Miller.

CLOAK, klôke. n. s. [lach, Saxon.]

1. The outer garment, with which the rest are covered.

You may bear it
Under a cloke that is of any length. Shakspeare.

Their clokes were cloth of silver, mixed with gold. Dryden.

All arguments will be as little able to prevail, as the wind did with the traveller to part with his cloak, which he held only the faster. Locke.

Nimbly he rose, and cast his garment down;
That instant in his cloak I wrapt me round. Pope.

2. A concealment; a cover.

Not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness. Peter.

To CLOAK, klôke. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a cloak.

2. To hide; to conceal.

Most heavenly fair, in deed and view,
She by creation was, till she did fall;
Thenceforth she sought for helps to cloak her crimes withal. Spenser.

CLO'AKBAG, klôke'bâg. n. s. [from cloak and bag.] A portmanteau; a bag in which clothes are carried.

Why do'st thou converse with that trunk of humours, that stuffed cloakbag of guts? Shakspeare.

I have already fit
('Tis in my cloakbag) doublet, hat, hose, all
That answer to them. Shakspeare.

CLOCK, klôk. n. s. [clocc, Welsh, from clôch a bell, Welsh and Armorick; cloche, Fr.]

1. The instrument which, by a series of mechanical movements, tells the hour by a stroke upon a bell.

If a man be in sickness or pain, the time will seem longer without a clock or hour-glass than with it. Bacon.

The picture of Jerome usually described at his study, is with a clock hanging by. Brown's V. Err.

I told the clocks, and watch'd the wasting light.
Dryden.

2. It is an usual expression to say, What is it of the clock, for What hour is it? Or ten o'clock, for the tenth hour.

What is 't o'clock?——
——Upon the stroke of four. Shakspeare.

Macicaus set forward about ten o'clock in the night. Knolles.

Exuberant nature's better blessings pour
O'er every land, the naked nations clothe,
And be th' exhaustless granary of a world. Thomson.

2. To adorn with dress.

We clothe and adorn our bodies; indeed, too much time we bestow upon that. Our souls also are to be clothed with holy habits, and adorned with good works. Ray on Creation.

Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds. Pope.

3. To invest, as with clothes.

I put on righteousness, and it clothed me. Job.
Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder? Job.
I will also clothe her priests with salvation. Psal.
If thou beest he; but O how fall'n! how chang'd
From him, who in the happy realms of light,
Cloth'd with transcendent brightness, did'st out shine
Myriads though bright! Milton.

They leave the shady realms of night,
And, cloth'd in bodies, breathe your upper light. Dryden.

Let both use the clearest language in which they can clothe their thoughts. Watts on the Mind.

4. To furnish or provide with clothes.

Drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags. Prov.

In embassy to his mother. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

To CLO'TTER, klôt'tûr. v. n. [klotteren, Dutch.] To concrete; to coagulate; to gather into lumps.

He dragg'd the trembling sire,
Slidd'ring thro' clotter'd blood and holy mire. Dryden's Æneid.

CLO'TTY, klôt'tê. adj. [from clot.] Full of clods; concreted; full of concretions.

The matter expectorated is thin, and mixt with thick, clotty, bluish streaks. Harvey on Consumptions.

Where land is clotty, and a shower of rain soaks through, you may make use of a roll to break it. Mortimer.

CLOUD, klôûd. n. s. [The derivation is not known. Minshew derives it from claudo, to shut; Somner from clod; Casaubon from αχλὺς, darkness; Skinner from kladde, Dutch, a spot.]

1. The dark collection of vapours in the air.

Now are the clouds, that lower'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shakspeare.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watery cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend, to that height in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till, by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist; or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew's Cosmologia.

Clouds are the greatest and most considerable of all the meteors, as furnishing water and plenty to the earth. They consist of very small drops of water, and are elevated a good distance above the surface of the earth; for a cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below Locke.

How vapours, turn'd to clouds, obscure the sky;
And clouds, dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Roscommon.

The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

2. The veins, marks, or stains, in stones or other bodies.

3. Any state of obscurity or darkness.

Tho' poets may of inspiration boast,
Their rage, ill govern'd, in the clouds is lost. Waller.

How can I see the brave and young
Fall in the cloud of war, and fall unsung? Addison.

4. Any thing that spreads wide; as a crowd, a multitude.

The objection comes to no more than this, that, amongst a cloud of witnesses, there was one of no very good reputation. Atterbury.

To CLOUD, klôûd. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken with clouds, to cover with clouds; to obscure.

2. To make of sullen and gloomy appearance.

Be not dishearten'd then, nor cloud those looks,
That wont to be more cheerful and serene. Milton.

What sullen fury clouds his scornful brow! Pope.

3. To obscure; to make less evident.

If men would not exhale vapours to cloud and darken the clearest truths, no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light. Decay of Piety.

4. To variegate with dark veins.

The handle smooth and plain,
Made of the clouded olive's easy grain. Pope.

The cloudcapt towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherits, shall dissolve. Shaksp.

CLOUDCOMPE'LLING, klôûd'kôm-pêl-ling.[410] adj. [A word formed in imitation of νεφεληγερετης, ill understood.] An epithet of Jupiter, by whom clouds were supposed to be collected.

Health to both kings, attended with a roar
Of cannons, echo'd from th' affrighted shore;
With loud resemblance of his thunder, prove
Bacchus the seed of cloudcompelling Jove. Waller.

Supplicating move
Thy just complaint to cloudcompelling Jove. Dryd.

CLO'UDILY, klôûd'dê-lê. adv. [from cloudy.]

1. With clouds; darkly.
2. Obscurely; not perspicuously.

Some had rather have good discipline delivered plainly, by way of precepts, than cloudily enwrapped in allegories. Spenser.

He was commanded to write so cloudily by Cornutus. Dryden.

CLO'UDINESS, klôû'dê-nês. n. s. [from cloudy.]

1. The state of being covered with clouds; darkness.

You have such a February face,
So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness. Shaksp.

The situation of this island exposes it to a continual cloudiness, which in the summer renders the air colder, and in the winter warm. Harvey.

2. Want of brightness.

I saw a cloudy Hungarian diamond made clearer by lying in a cold liquor; wherein, he affirmed, that upon keeping it longer, the stone would lose more of its cloudiness. Boyle.

CLO'UDLESS, klôûd'lês. adj. [from cloud.] Without clouds; clear; unclouded; bright; luminous; lightsome; pure; undarkened.

This Partridge soon shall view in cloudless skies,
When next he looks through Galilæo's eyes. Pope.

How many such there must be in the vast extent of space, a naked eye in a cloudless night may give us some faint glimpse. Cheyne.

CLO'UDY, klôûd'dê. adj. [from cloud.]

1. Covered with clouds; obscured with clouds; consisting of clouds.

As Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door. Exodus.

2. Dark; obscure; not intelligible.

If you content yourself frequently with words instead of ideas, or with cloudy and confused notions of things, how impenetrable will that darkness be! Watts on the Mind.

3. Gloomy of look; not open, not cheerful.

So my storm-beaten heart likewise is cheer'd
With that sun-shine, when cloudy looks are clear'd. Spenser

Witness my son, now in the shade of death,
Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness folded up. Shakspeare.

4. Marked with spots or veins.
5. Not bright, wanting lustre.

I saw a cloudy diamond. Boyle.

CLOVE, klôve. [the preterite of To cleave.] See To CLEAVE.

Clove seems to be the rudiment or beginning of a fruit growing upon clove-trees. Brown.

2. Some of the parts into which garlick separates, when the outer skin is torn off. [In this sense it is derived from clove, the preterite of cleave.]

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred power. Tate's Juv.

CLOVE-GILLYFLOWER, klôve-jil'lê-flôûr. n. s. [from its smelling like cloves.]

This genus may be divided into three classes; 1. The clove-gillyflower, or carnation. 2. The pink. 3. The sweet William. The carnation, or clove-gillyflower, are distinguished into four classes. The first, called flakes, having two colours only, and their stripes large, going quite through the leaves. The second, called bizars, have flowers striped or variegated with three or four different colours. The third are piquettes: these flowers have always a white ground, and are spotted with scarlet, red, purple, or other colours. The fourth are called painted ladies: these have their petals of a red or purple colour on the upper side, and are white underneath. Of each of these classes there are numerous varieties. The true clove-gillyflower has been long in use for making a cordial syrup. There are two or three varieties commonly brought to the markets, which differ greatly in goodness; some having very little scent, when compared with the true sort. Miller.

CLO'VEN, klô'vn.[103] part. pret. [from cleave.] See To CLEAVE.

There is Aufidius, list you what work he makes
Among your cloven army. Shakspeare.

The collocation of the spirits in bodies, whether the spirits be coacervate or diffused.
Bacon's Natural History.

COACERVA'TION, kò-ăs-sér-vá'shůn. n. s. [from coacervate.] The act of heaping, or state of being heaped, together.

The fixing of it is the equal spreading of the tangible parts, and the close coacervation of them.
Bacon's Natural History.

COACH, kòtsh. n. s. [coche, Fr. kotczy, among the Hungarians, by whom this vehicle is said to have been invented. Minshew.] A carriage of pleasure, or state, distinguished from a chariot by having seats fronting each other.

Basilius attended for her in a coach, to carry her abroad to see some sports. Sidney.
A better would you fix?
Then give humility a coach and six. Pope.
Suppose that last week my coach was within an inch of overturning in a smooth even way, and drawn by very gentle horses. Swift.

To COACH, kòtsh. v. a. [from the noun.] To carry in a coach.

The needy poet sticks to all he meets,
Coach'd, carted, trod upon; now loose, now fast,
And carry'd off in some dog's tail at last. Pope.

COACH-BOX, kòtsh'bòks. n. s. [coach and box.] The seat on which the driver of the coach sits.

Her father had two coachmen: when one was in the coachbox, if the coach swung but in the least to one side, she used to shriek.
Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

COACH-HIRE, kòtsh'hire. n. s. Money paid for the use of a hired coach.

You exclaim as loud as those that praise,
For scraps and coach-hire, a young noble's plays.
Dryden.
My expenses in coach-hire make no small article.
Spectator.

COACH-HOUSE, kòtsh'hòůse.[313] n. s. [coach and house.] The house in which the coach is kept from the weather.

Let him lie in the stable or the coach-house.
Swift.

COACH-MAKER, kòtsh'mà-kůr.[98] n. s. [coach and maker.] The artificer whose trade is to make coaches.

Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,
Made by the joyner Squirrel, or old Grub,
Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers. Shak.
Take care of your wheels: get a new set bought, and probably the coach-maker will consider you.
Swift.

COACH-MAN, kòtsh'mân.[86] n. s. [coach and man.] The driver of a coach.

Thy nags, the leanest things alive,
So very hard thou lov'st to drive;
I heard thy anxious coachman say,
It cost thee more in whips than hay. Prior.
She commanded her trembling coachman to drive her chariot near the body of her king. South.

To COA'CT, kò-ăkt' v. n. [from con and act.] To act together; to act in concert. Not used.

But if I tell how these two did coact,
Shall I not lye in publishing a truth. Shaksp.

COA'CTION, kò-ăk'shůn. n. s. [coactus, Lat.] Compulsion; force, either restraining or impelling.

It had the passions in perfect subjection; and though its command over them was persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coaction, and despotical. South.

COA'CTIVE, kò-ăk'tiv.[187] adj. [from coact.]

1. Having the force of restraining or impelling; compulsory; restrictive.

The Levitical priests, in the old law, never arrogated unto themselves any temporal or coactive power. Raleigh.

2. Acting in concurrence. Obsolete.

Imagination,
With what's unreal thou coactive art. Shaksp.

COADJU'MENT, kò-ăd'jů-mênt. n. s. [from con and adjumentum, Lat.] Mutual assistance. Dict.

COADJU'TANT, kò-ăd'jů-tânt. n. s. [from con and adjuto, Lat.] Helping; cooperating.

COADJU'VANCY, kò-ăd'jů-vân-sė. n. s. [from con and adjuvo, Lat.] Help; concurrent help; contribution of help; cooperation.

Crystal is a mineral body, in the difference of stones, made of a lentous percolation of earth, drawn from the most pure and limpid juice thereof; owing to the coldness of the earth some concurrence and coadjuvancy, but not immediate determination and efficiency. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

COADUNI'TION, kò-ăd-ů-nish'ůn. n. s. [from con, ad, unitio, Lat.] The conjunction of different substances into one mass.

Bodies seem to have an intrinsick principle of, or corruption from, the coadunition of particles endued with contrary qualities. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To COAGME'NT, kò-ăg-mènt'. v. a. [from con and agmen, Lat.] To congregate or heap together. I have only found the participle in use.

Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.

COAGMENTA'TION, kò-ăg-mėn-tà'shůn. n. s. [from coagment.] Collection, or coacervation, into one mass; union; conjunction.

The third part rests in the well joining, cementing, and coagmentation of words, when it is smooth, gentle, and sweet. Ben Jonson.

COA'GULABLE, kò-ăg'ů-lă-bl. adj. [from coagulate.] That which is capable of concretion.

Stones that are rich in vitriol, being often drenched with rain water, the liquor will then extract a fine and transparent substance, coagulable into vitriol. Boyle.

To COA'GULATE, kò-ăg'ů-làte.[91] v. a. [coagulo, Lat.] To force into concretions; as, by the affusion of some other substance, to turn milk.

Roasted in wrath and fire,
And thus o'ersized with coagulate gore. Shaksp.
Vivification ever consisteth in spirits attenuate, which the cold doth congeal and coagulate.
Bacon's Natural History.
Bitumen is found in lumps, or coagulated masses, in some springs. Woodward's Natural History.
The milk in the stomach of calves, which is coagulated by the runnet, is again dissolved and rendered fluid by the gall in the duodenum. Arbuthnot.

To COA'GULATE, kò-ăg'ů-làte. v. n. To run into concretions, or congelations.

Spirit of wine commixed with milk, a third part spirit of wine, and two parts milk, coagulateth little, but mingleth; and the spirit swims not above.
Bacon.
About the third part of the oil olive, which was driven over into the receiver, did there coagulate into a whitish body, almost like butter. Boyle.

COAGULA'TION, kò-ăg-ů-là'shůn. n. s. [from coagulate.]

1. Concretion; congelation; the act of coagulating; the state of being coagulated.

2. The body formed by coagulation.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbuthnot.

COA'GULATIVE, kò-ăg'ů-là-tiv. adj. [from coagulate.] That which has the power of causing concretion, or coagulation.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have sometimes in a minute arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance, only by dexterously mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol. Boyle.

COAGULA'TOR, kò-ăg'ů-là-tůr.[521] n. s. [from coagulate.] That which causes coagulation.

Coagulators of the humours, are those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of incrassating, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents. Arbuthnot.

COAL, kòle.[295] n. s. [col, Sax. kol, Germ. kole, Dut. kul, Danish.]

1. The common fossile fewel.

Coal is a black, sulphureous, inflammatory matter, dug out of the earth, serving for fewel, common in Europe, though the English coal is of most repute. One species of pit coal is called cannel, or canole coal, which is found in the northern counties; hard, glossy, and light, apt to cleave into thin flakes, and, when kindled, yields a continual blaze till it be burnt out. Chambers.

Coals are solid, dry, opake, inflammable substances, found in large strata, splitting horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy hue, soft, and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ashes. Hill on Fossils.

But age, enforc'd, falls by her own consent:
As coals to ashes, when the spirit's spent. Denham.

We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marle. Woodward's Natural History.

2. The cinder of scorched wood; charcoal.

Whatsoever doth so alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteratio major; as when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood, or bricks of earth. Bacon.

3. Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.

You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstones in the sun. Shaksp.

You have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me. Shaksp.

The rage of jealousy then fir'd his soul,
And his face kindled like a burning coal. Dryden.

To COAL, kôle. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To burn wood to charcoal.

Add the tinner's care and cost in buying the wood for this service; felling, framing, and piling it to be burnt; in fetching the same, when it is coaled, through such far, foul, and cumbersome ways. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Charcoal of roots, coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon.

2. To delineate with a coal.

Marvailing, he coaled out rhimes upon the wall, near to the picture. Camden.

COAL-BLACK, kôle'blâk. adj. [coal and black.] Black in the highest degree; of the colour of a coal.

As burning Ætna, from his boiling stew,
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enrapt in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Fairy Queen.

Ethiopians and negroes become coal-black from fuliginous efflorescencies, and complexional tinctures. Brown.

Coal-black his colour, but like jet it shone;
His legs and flowing tail were white alone. Dryd.

COAL-BOX, kôle'bôks. n. s. [coal and box.] A box to carry coals to the fire.

Leave a pail of dirty water, a coal-box, a bottle, a broom, and such other unsightly things. Swift.

COAL-FISH, kôle'fish. n. s. [asellus niger.] A species of beardless gadus.

COAL-MINE, kôle'mine. n. s. [coal and mine.] A mine in which coals are dug; a coal pit.

Springs injure land, that flow from coal-mines. Mortimer.

COAL-PIT, kôle'pit. n. s. [from coal and pit.] A pit made in the earth, generally to a great depth, for digging coals.

A leaf of the polypody kind, found in the sinking of a coal-pit. Woodward.

COAL-STONE, kôle'stône. n. s. [coal and stone.] A sort of cannel coal. See COAL.

Coal-stone flames easily, and burns freely; but holds and endures the fire much longer than coal. Woodward.

COAL-WORK, kôle'wûrk. n. s. [coal and work.] A coalery; a place where coals are found.

There is a vast treasure in the old English, from whence authors may draw constant supplies; as our officers make their surest remits from the coal-works and the mines. Felton.

CO'ALERY, kô'lêr-ê. n. s. [from coal.] A place where coals are dug.

Two fine stalactitæ were found hanging from a black stone, at a deserted vault in Benwell coalery. Woodward.

To COALE'SCE, kô-â-lês'. v. n. [coalesco, Lat.]

1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the transparency of the air, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superficies; but when they begin to coalesce, and constitute globules, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colours. Newton.

2. To grow together; to join.

COALE'SCENCE, kô-â-lês'sênse. n. s. [from coalesce.] The act of coalescing; concretion; union.

COALI'TION, kô-â-lish'ûn. n. s. [from coalesco, coalitum, Lat.] Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The world's a mass of heterogeneous consistencies, and every part thereof a coalition of distinguishable varieties. Glanville.

In the first coalition of a people, their prospect is not great: they provide laws for their present exigence. Hale.

'Tis necessary that these squandered atoms should convene and unite into great masses: without such a coalition the chaos must have reigned to all eternity. Bentley.

CO'ALY, kô'l. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.

Or coaly Tine, or ancient hallow'd Dee. Milton.

COAPTA'TION, kô-âp-tâ'shûn. n. s. [from con and apto, Lat.] The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock, the hand is moved upon the dial, the bell is struck, and the other actions belonging to the engine are performed, by virtue of the size, shape, bigness, and coaptation of the several parts. Boyle.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious coaptation and ranging of the words. Broome.

To COA'RCT, kô-ârkt'. } v. a.
To COA'RCTATE, kô-ârk-tâte'. } [coarcto, Lat.]

1. To straiten; to confine into a narrow compass.

The wind finding the room in the form of a trunk, and coarctated therein, forced the stones of the window, like pellets, clean through it. Bacon.

2. To contract power; to restrain.

If a man coarcts himself to the extremity of an act, he must blame and impute it to himself that he has thus coarcted or straitened himself so far. Ayliffe.

COARCTA'TION, kô-ârk-tâ'shûn. n. s. [from coarct.]

1. Confinement; restraint to a narrow space.

The greatest winds, if they have no coarctation, or blow not hollow, give an interiour sound. Bacon.

2. Contraction of any space.

Straighten the artery never so much, provided the sides of it do not meet, the vessel will continue to beat, below or beyond the coarctation. Ray.

3. Restraint of liberty.

Election is opposed not only to coaction, but also to coarctation, or determination to one. Bramhall.

COARSE, kôrse. adj

1. Not refined: not separated from impurities or baser parts.

I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded. Shaksp.

2. Not soft or fine: used of cloth, of which the threads are large.

3. Rude; uncivil; rough of manners.

4. Gross; not delicate.

'Tis not the coarser tye of human law
That binds their peace. Thomson

5. Inelegant; rude; unpolished.

Praise of Virgil is against myself, for presuming to copy, in my coarse English, his beautiful expressions. Dryden.

6. Not nicely expert; unfinished by art or education.

Practical rules may be useful to such as are remote from advice, and to coarse practitioners which they are obliged to make use of. Arbuthnot

7 Mean; not nice; not elegant; vile.

Ill consort, and a coarse perfume,
Disgrace the delicacy of a feast. Roscommon.

A coarse and useless dunghill weed,
Fix'd to one spot, to rot just as it grows. Otway.

From this coarse mixture of terrestrial parts,
Desire and fear by turns possess their hearts. Dryden.

CO'ARSELY, kôrse'lê. adv. [from coarse.]

1. Without fineness; without refinement.

2. Meanly; not elegantly.

John came neither eating nor drinking, but fared coarsely and poorly, according to the apparel he wore. Brown.

3. Rudely; not civilly.

The good cannot be too much honoured, nor the bad too coarsely used. Dryden.

4. Inelegantly.

Be pleased to accept the rudiments of Virgil's poetry, coarsely translated, but which yet retains some beauties of the author. Dryden.

CO'ARSENESS, kôrse'nês. n. s. [from coarse.]

1. Impurity; unrefined state.

First know the materials whereof the glass is made; then consider what the reason is of the coarseness or dearness. Bacon's Essays.

2. Roughness; want of fineness.

3. Grossness; want of delicacy.

Friends (pardon the coarseness of the illustration) as dogs in couples, should be of the same size. L'Estrange.

4. Roughness; rudeness of manners.

A base wild olive he remains;
The shrub the coarseness of the clown retains. Garth.

5. Meanness; want of nicety.

Consider the penuriousness of the Hollanders, the coarseness of their food and raiment, and their little indulgences of pleasure. Addison on the War.

COAST, kôste. n. s. [coste, Fr. costa, Latin.]

1. The edge or margin of the land next the sea; the shore. It is not used for the banks of less waters.

He sees in English ships the Holland coast. Dryden.

2. It seems to be taken by Newton for side, like the French coste. It was likewise so used by Bacon.

The south-east is found to be better for ripening of trees than the south-west; though the south-west be the hottest coast. Bacon

Some kind of virtue, lodged in some sides of the crystal, inclines and bends the rays toward the coast, of unusual refraction; otherwise the rays would not be refracted towards that coast rather than any other coast, both at their incidence and their emergence, so as to emerge by a contrary situation of the coast. Newton's Opticks.

3. The Coast is clear. [A proverbial expression.] The danger is over; the enemies have marched off.

Going out, and seeing that the coast was clear, Zelmane dismissed Musidorus. Sidney.

The royal spy, when now the coast was clear, Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen. Dryd.

To COAST, kôste. v. n. [from the noun.] To sail close by the coast; to sail within sight of land.

But steer my vessel with a steady hand,
And coast along the shore in sight of land.
Dryden's Virgil.

The ancients coasted only in their navigation, seldom taking the open sea. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To COAST, kôste. v. a. To sail by; to sail near to.

Nearchus, the admiral of Alexander, not knowing the compass, was fain to coast that shore. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The greatest entertainment we found in coasting it, were the several prospects of woods, vineyards, meadows, and corn-fields which lie on the borders of it. Addison on Italy.

CO'ASTER, kôs'tûr. n. s. [from coast.] He that sails timorously near the shore.

In our small skiff we must not launch too far;
We here but coasters, not discov'rers are. Dryden.

COAT, kôte. n. s. [cotte, Fr. cotta, Ital.]

1. The upper garment.

He was armed with a coat of mail, and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass. 1 Samuel.

The coat of many colours they brought to their father, and said, this have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no. Genesis.

2. Petticoat; the habit of a boy in his infancy; the lower part of a woman's dress.

A friend's younger son, a child in coats, was not easily brought to his book. Locke.

3. The habit or vesture, as demonstrative of the office.

For his intermeddling with arms, he is the more excuseable, because many of his coat, in those times, are not only martial directors, but commanders. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Men of his coat should be minding their pray'rs,
And not among ladies, to give themselves airs.
Swift.

4. The hair or fur of a beast; the covering of any animal.

He clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts; or slain,
Or, as the snake, with youthful coat repaid;
And thought not much to clothe his enemies.
Milton.

Give your horse some powder of brimstone in his oats, and it will make his coat lie fine.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

You have given us milk
In luscious streams, and lent us your own coat
Against the winter's cold. Thomson's Spring.

5. Any tegument, tunick, or covering.

The eye is defended with four coats or skins.
Peacham.

The optick nerves have their medullary parts terminating in the brain, their teguments terminating in the coats of the eye.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

Amber is a nodule, invested with a coat, called rock-amber. Woodward on Fossils.

6. That on which the ensigns armorial are portrayed.

The herald of love's mighty king,
In whose coat armour richly are display'd
All sorts of flowers the which on earth do spring.
Spenser.

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away.
Shaksp. Henry VI.

At each trumpet was a banner bound,
Which, waving in the wind, display'd at large
Their master's coat of arms and knightly charge.
Dryden.

To COAT, kôte. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover; to invest; to overspread: as, to coat a retort; to coat a ceiling.

To COAX, kôks. v. a. To wheedle; to flatter, to humour. A low word.

The nurse had changed her note; she was muzzling and coaxing the child; that's a good dear says she. L'Estrange.

I coax! I wheedle! I'm far above it.
Farquhar's Recruiting Officer.

CO'AXER, kôks'ûr. n. s. [from the verb.] A wheedler; a flatterer.

COB, kôb. A word often used in the composition of low terms; corrupted from cop, Sax. kopf, Germ. the head or top.

COB, kôb. n. s.

1. A sort of sea-fowl; called also sea-cob.
Phillips.

2. In some provinces, and probably in old language, a spider; whence cobweb.

CO'BALT, kôb'âlt. n. s. A marcasite frequent in Saxony.

Cobalt is plentifully impregnated with arsenick; contains copper and some silver. Being sublimed, the flores are of a blue colour: these, German mineralists call zaffir. Woodward.

Cobalt is a dense, compact, and ponderous mineral, very bright and shining, and much resembling some of the antimonial ores. It is found in Germany, Saxony, Bohemia, and England; but ours is a poor kind. From cobalt are produced the three sorts of arsenick, white, yellow, and red; as also zaffre and smalt. Hill on Fossils.

To CO'BBLE, kôb'bl.[405] v. a. [kobler, Dan.]

1. To mend any thing coarsely: used generally of shoes.

If you be out, Sir, I can mend you.—Why, Sir, cobble you? Shaksp. Julius Cæsar.

They'll sit by th' fire, and presume to know
What's done i' th' capitol; making parties strong,
And feeble such as stand not in their liking
Below their cobbled shoes. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Many underlayers, when they could not live upon their trade, have raised themselves from cobbling to fluxing. L'Estrange.

2. To do or make any thing clumsily, or unhandily.

Reject the nauseous praises of the times;
Give thy base poets back their cobbled rhimes.
Dryden.

Believe not that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering, nothing effected for any purpose or design, but all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together. Bentley.

CO BBLER, kôb'lûr.[98] n. s. [from cobble.]

1. A mender of old shoes.

Not many years ago it happened that a cobbler had the casting vote for the life of a criminal.
Addison on Italy.

2. A clumsy workman in general.

What trade are you?—

Truly, Sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.
Shaksp. Julius Cæsar.

3. In a kind of proverbial sense, any mean person.

Think you the great prerogative t' enjoy
Of doing ill, by virtue of that race?
As if what we esteem in cobblers base
Would the high family of Brutus grace.
Dryden's Juvenal.

CO'BIRONS, kôb'i-ûrnz. n. s. [cob and iron.] Irons with a knob at the upper end.

The implements of the kitchen; as spits, ranges, cobirons and pots. Bacon's Physical Remains.

COBI'SHOP, kô-bish'ûp. n. s. [con and bishop.] A coadjutant bishop.

Valerius, advanced in years, and a Grecian by birth, not qualified to preach in the Latin tongue, made use of Austin as a cobishop, for the benefit of the church of Hippo. Ayliffe.

CO'BNUT, kôb'nût. n. s. [cob and nut.] A boy's game; the conquering nut.

CO'BSWAN, kôb'swôn. n. s. [cob, head, and swan.] The head or leading swan.

With a cobswan, or a high-mounting bull,
As foolish Leda and Europa were.
Ben Jonson's Cataline.

CO'BWEB, kôb'wêb. n. s. [kopweb, Dut.]

1. The web or net of a spider: from cob, a spider.

The luckless Clarion,
With violent swift flight, forth carried
Into the cursed cobweb, which his foe
Had framed for his final overthrow. Spenser.

Is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewed, and cobwebs swept.
Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.

The spider, in the house of a burgher, fell presently to her network of drawing cobwebs up and down. L'Estrange.

2. Any snare, or trap: implying insidiousness or weakness.

For he a rope of sand could twist
As tough as learned Sorbonist;
And weave fine cobwebs fit for scull
That's empty when the moon is full. Hudibras.

Chronology at best is but a cobweb law, and he broke through it with his weight. Dryden.

Laws are like cobwebs, which may catch small flies, but let wasps and hornets break through.
Swift.

CO'COA, kô'kô. n. s. See CACAO.

COCCI'FEROUS, kôk-sif'fêr-rûs. adj. [from κοκκός, and fero, Lat.] All plants or trees are so called that have berries.

That at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about it, which agreeth with the description of the unicorn's horn in Ælian.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

CO'CHLEATED, kôk'lê-â-têd. adj. [from cochlea, Lat.] Of a screwed or turbinated form.

Two pieces of stone, struck forth of the cavity of the umbilici of shells, of the same sort with the foregoing: they are of a cochleated figure.
Woodward on Fossils.

COCK, kôk. n. s. [cocc, Saxon, coq, Fr.]

1. The male to the hen; a domestick fowl remarkable for his gallantry, pride, and courage.

Cocks have great combs and spurs; hens, little or none. Bacon's Natural History.

True cocks o' th' game,
That never ask for what, or when, they fight;

But turn 'em out, and shew 'em but a foe,
Cry liberty, and that's a cause of quarrel. Dryd.
The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around,
Fed and defended by the fearless cock.
Thomson's Spring.

2. The male of any small birds.
Calves and philosophers, tygers and statesmen, cock sparrows and coquets, exactly resemble one another in the formation of the pineal gland.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

3. The weathercock, that shews the direction of the wind by turning.
You cataracts and hurricanoes, spout
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the 'cocks! Shaksp.

4. A spout to let out water at will, by turning the stop: the handle had probably a cock on the top. Things that were contrived to turn, seem anciently to have had that form whatever was the reason.
When every room
Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy,
I have retir'd me to a wasteful coc
And set mine eyes to flow. Shaksp.
It were good there were a little cock made in the belly of the upper glass. Bacon's Natural History.
Thus the small jett, which hasty hands unlock,
Spirts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock.
Pope.

5. The notch of an arrow.

6. The part of the lock of a gun that strikes with the flint. [from cocca, Ital. the notch of an arrow. Skinner. Perhaps from the action, like that of a cock pecking; but it was, I think, so called when it had not its present form.]
With hasty rage he snatch'd
His gunshot, that in holsters watch'd;
And bending cock, he levell'd full
Against th' outside of Talgol's skull. Hudibras.
A seven-shot gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges. Under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder from the box to a funnel at the further end of the lock.
Grew.

7. A conqueror; a leader; a governing man.
Sir Andrew is the cock of the club since he left us. Addison.
My schoolmaster call'd me a dunce and a fool; But at cuffs I was always the cock of the school.
Swift.

8. Cockcrowing; a note of time in a morning.
We were carousing till the second cock. Shak.
He begins at curfew, and goes till the first cock.
Shakspeare.

9. A cockboat; a small boat.
They take view of all sized cocks, barges, and fisherboats hovering on the coast.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy,
Almost too small for sight. Shaksp.

10. A small heap of hay. [properly cop.]
As soon as the dew is off the ground, spread the hay again, and turn it, that it may wither on the other side: then handle it, and if you find it dry, make it up into cocks. Mortimer.

11. The form of a hat. [from the comb of the cock.]
You see many a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, moulding it into several different cocks. Addison.

12. The style or gnomon of a dial.
Chambers.

13. The needle of a balance.

14. Cock on the Hoop. Triumphant; exulting.
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop.
Camden's Remains.
You'll make a mutiny among my guests,
You will set cock a hoop! Shakspeare.
For Hudibras, who thought h' had won
The field, as certain as a gun,
And having routed the whole troop,
With victory was cock a hoop. Hudibras.

To Cock, kôk. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set erect; to hold bolt upright as a cock holds his head.
This is that muscle which performs the motion so often mentioned by the Latin poets, when they talk of a man's cocking his nose, or playing the rhinoceros. Addison.
Our Lightfoot barks, and cocks his ears;
O'er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears.
Gay's Pastorals.
Dick would cock his nose in scorn,
But Tom was kind and loving. Swift.

2. To set up the hat with an air of petulance and pertness.
Dick, who thus long had passive sat,
Here strok'd his chin and cock'd his hat. Prior.
An alert young fellow cocked his hat upon a friend of his who entered. Addison's Spectator.

3. To mould the form of the hat.

4. To fix the cock of a gun ready for a discharge.
Some of them holding up their pistols, cocked, near the door of the house, which they kept open.
Dryden's Dedication, Æneid.

5. To raise hay in small heaps.
Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay.
Spenser's Pastorals.

To Cock, kôk. v. n.

1. To strut; to hold up the head, and look big, or menacing, or pert.
Sir Fopling is a fool so nicely writ;
The ladies would mistake him for a wit;
And when he sings, talks loud, and cocks, would cry, I vow, methinks, he's pretty company. Dryden.
Every one cocks and struts upon it, and pretends to overlook us. Addison's Guardian.

2. To train or use fighting cocks.
Cries out 'gainst cocking, since he cannot bet.
Ben Jonson.

Cock, kôk in composition, signifies small or little.

Cocka'de, kôk-kâde. n. s. [from cock.] A ribband worn in the hat.

Co'ckatrice, kôk'â-trise.[142] n. s. [from cock, and ατεφ, Sax. a serpent.] A serpent supposed to rise from a cock's egg.
They will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices. Shakspeare.
This was the end of this little cockatrice of a king, that was able to destroy those that did not espy him first. Bacon.
This cockatrice is soonest crushed in the shell; but, if it grows, it turns to a serpent and a dragon.
Taylor.
My wife! 'tis she, the very cockatrice! Congreve.

Co'ckboat, kôk'bôte. n. s. [cock and boat.] A small boat belonging to a ship.
That invincible armada, which having not fired a cottage of ours at land, nor taken a cockboat of ours at sea, wandered through the wilderness of the northern seas. Bacon
Did they think it less dishonour to God to be like a brute, or a plant, or a cockboat, than to be like a man? Stillingfleet.

Co'ckbroth, kôk'brôth. n. s. Broth made by boiling a cock.
Diet upon spoon-meats; as veal or cockbroths prepared with French barley. Harvey on Consump.

Cockcro'wing, kôk'krô-ing. n. s. [cock and crow.] The time at which cocks crow; the morning.
Ye know not when the master of the house cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning. Mark.

To Co'cker, kôk'kûr. v. a. [coqueliner, Fr.] To cade; to fondle; to indulge.
Most children's constitutions are spoiled by cockering and tenderness. Locke on Education.
He that will give his sons sugar plumbs to make him learn, does but authorise his love of pleasure, and cocker up that propensity which he ought to subdue. Locke on Education.
Bred a fondling and an heiress,
Dress'd like any Lady May'ress,
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

Co'cker, kôk'kûr.[98] n. s. [from cock.] One who follows the sport of cock-fighting.

Co'ckerel, kôk'kûr-îl.[555] n. s. [from cock.] A young cock.
Which of them first begins to crow?—
The old cock?—The cockerel. Shakspeare.
What wilt thou be, young cockerel, when thy spurs
Are grown to sharpness? Dryden.

Co'cket, kôk'kil.[99] n. s. [of uncertain derivation.]
A seal belonging to the king's customhouse: likewise a scroll of parchment, sealed and delivered by the officers of the customhouse to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandise is entered. Cowell.
The greatest profit did arise by the cocket of hides; for wool and woolfells were ever of little value in this kingdom. Davies.

Co'ckfight, kôk'fite. n. s. [cock and fight.] A battle or match of cocks.
In cockfights, to make one cock more hardy, and the other more cowardly. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
At the seasons of football and cockfighting, these little republics reassume their national hatred to each other. Addison.

Co'ckhorse, kôk'hôrse. adj. [cock and horse.] On horseback; triumphant; exulting.
Alma, they strenuously maintain,
Sits cockhorse on her throne the brain. Prior.

CO'CKLE, kôk'kl.[405] n. s. [coquille, Fr.]

1. A small testaceous fish.
It is a cockle or a walnut shell. Shaksp.
We may, I think, from the make of an oyster, or cockle, reasonably conclude, that it has not so many, nor so quick, senses as a man. Locke.
Three common cockle shells, out of gravel pits.
Woodward.

2. A little or young cock. Obsolete.
They bearen the crag so stiff and so state,
As cockle on his dunghill crowing crank.
Spenser's Pastorals.

Co'ckle-stairs, kôk'kl-stârs. n. s. Winding or spiral stairs. Chambers.

Co'ckle, kôk'kl. n. s. [coccel, Sax. lolium, zizania, Lat.] A weed that grows in corn, the same with cornrose; a species of poppy.
In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shaksp.
Good seed degenerates, and oft obeys
The soil's disease, and into cockle strays. Donne.

To Co'ckle, kôk'kl. v. a. [from cockle.]

To contract into wrinkles, like the shell of a cockle.

Show'rs soon drench the camblet's cockled grain. Gay.

Co'CKLED, kŏk'kld.[369] adj. [from cockle.] Shelled; or perhaps cochleate, turbinated.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shaksp.

Co'CKLOFT, kŏk'lŏft. n. s. [cock and loft.] The room over the garret, in which fowls are supposed to roost; unless it be rather corrupted from coploft, the cop or top of the house.

If the lowest floors already burn,
Cocklofts and garrets will soon take their turn.
Dryden's Juvenal.

My garrets, or rather my cocklofts indeed, are very indifferently furnished; but they are rooms to lay lumber in. Swift.

Co'CKMASTER, kŏk'mâs-tûr. n. s. [cock and master.] One that breeds game cocks.

A cockmaster bought a partridge, and turned it among the fighting cocks. L'Estrange.

Co'CKMATCH, kŏk'mâtsh. n. s. [cock and match.] Cockfight for a prize.

At the same time that the heads of parties preserve towards one another an outward shew of good breeding, their tools will not so much as mingle at a cockmatch. Addison.

Though quail-fighting is what is most taken notice of, they had doubtless cockmatches also. Arbuthnot and Pope.

Co'CKNEY, kŏk'nė.[370] n. s. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, païs de cocaigne, for a country of dainties:

Paris est pour un riche un païs de cocaigne. Boileau.

Of this word they are not able to settle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem:

Far in see bỳ west Spaỳng,
Is a lond yhoꝛe cocaỳng.

On which Dr. Hickes has this remark:

Nunc coquin, coquine: quæ olim apud Gallos, otio, gulæ et ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavam, desidiosum, desidiosam, segnem, significabant. Hinc urbanos, utpote à rusticis laboribus ad vitam sedentariam et desidiosam avocatos, pagani nostri olim cokaignes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et poëta hic noster in monachos et moniales, ut segne genus hominum qui, desidiæ dediti, ventri indulgebant, et coquinæ amatores erant, malevolentissime invehitur; monasteria et monasticam vitam inde scriptione terræ cockaineæ parabolicè perstringens.]

1. A native of London, by way of contempt.

So the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' th' pasty alive. Shak. King Lear.

For who is such a cockney in his heart,
Proud of the plenty of the southern part,
To scorn that union, by which we may
Boast 'twas his countryman that writ this play?
Dorset.

The cockney, travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

2. Any effeminate, ignorant, low, mean, despicable citizen.

I am afraid this great lubber the world will prove a cockney. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

Co'CKPIT, kŏk'pit. n. s. [cock and pit.]

1. The area where cocks fight.

Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France? Shaksp.

And now have I gained the cockpit of the western world, and academy of arms, for many years. Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. A place on the lower deck of a man of war, where are subdivisions for the purser, the surgeon, and his mates. Harris.

Co'CK'S-COMB, kŏks'kŏme. n. s. [cock and comb.] A plant.

Co'CKSHUT, kŏk'shŭt. n. s. [from cock and shut.] The close of the evening, at which time poultry go to roost.

Surrey and himself,
Much about cockshut time, from troop to troop
Went through the army. Shakspeare.

Co'CKSPUR, kŏk'spûr. n. s. [cock and spur.] Virginia hawthorn. A species of medlar. Miller.

Co'CKSURE, kŏk'shôôr. adv. [from cock and sure.] Confidently certain; without fear or diffidence. A word of contempt.

We steal, as in a castle, cocksure. Shaksp.

I thought myself cocksure of his horse, which he readily promised me. Pope's Letters.

Co'CKSWAIN, kŏk'sn. n. s. [coꝛꝛ ꝓaine, Sax.] The officer who has the command of the cock-boat. Corruptly COXON.

Co'CKWEED, kŏk'wēēd. n. s. [from cock and weed.] The name of a plant, called also Dittander, or Pepperwort.

Co'COA, kŏ'kŏ. n. s. [cacaotal, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao.]

A species of palm tree, cultivated in the East and West Indies. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the shell into drinking bowls. The kernel affords them a wholesome food, and the milk contained in the shell a cooling liquor. The leaves are used for thatching their houses, and are wrought into baskets. Miller.

The cacao or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure; is composed of a thin but hard and woody coat or skin, of a dark blackish colour; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleshy, dry, firm, and fattish to the touch, of a dusky colour, an agreeable smell, and a pleasant and peculiar taste. It was unknown to us till the discovery of America. The tree is of the thickness of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height; its bark rough, and full of tubercles; and its leaves six or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers are succeeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, resembling a cucumber, five, six, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickness; when fully ripe, of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit are lodged the cocoa nuts, usually about thirty in number. Hill's Mat. Med.

Amid' those orchards of the sun,
Give me to drain the cocoa's milky bowl,
And from the palm to draw its freshening wine.
Thomson.

Co'CTILE, kŏk'tĭl.[140] adj. [coctilis, Latin.] Made by baking, as a brick.

Co'CTION, kŏk'shŭn. n. s. [coctio, Latin.] The act of boiling.

The disease is sometimes attended with expectoration from the lungs, and that is taken off by a coction and resolution of the feverish matter, or terminates in suppurations or a gangrene. Arbuth. on Diet.

COD, kŏd. } n. s. [asellus.] A sea
Co'DFISH, kŏd'fish. } fish

COD, kŏd. n. s. [coꝺꝺe, Sax.] Any case or husk in which seeds are lodged.

Thy corn thou there mays't safely sow,
Where in full cods last year rich pease did grow.
May.

They let pease lie in small heaps as they are reaped, till they find the hawm and cod dry. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To COD, kŏd. v. n. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cod.

All codded grain being a destroyer of weeds, an improver of land, and a preparer of it for other crops. Mortimer.

Co'DDERS, kŏd'dûrs. n. s. [from cod.] Gatherers of pease. Dict.

CODE, kōde. n. s. [codex, Lat.]

1. A book.

2. A book of the civil law.

We find in the Theodosian and Justinian code the interest of trade very well provided for. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves; and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are.
Pope's Sat.

Co'DICIL, kŏd'ė sĭl. n. s. [codicillus, Lat.] An appendage to a will.

The man suspects his lady's crying
Was but to gain him to appoint her,
By codicil, a larger jointure. Prior.

CODI'LLE, kŏ-dĭl'. n. s. [codille, Fr. codillo, Span.] A term at ombre, when the game is won.

She sees, and trembles at th' approaching ill;
Just in the jaws of ruin, and codille.
Pope's Rape of the Lock.

To CO'DLE, kŏd'dl.[405] v. a. [coquo, coctulo, Lat. Skinner.] To parboil; to soften by the heat of water.

Co'DLING, kŏd'lĭng. n. s. [from To codle.] An apple generally codled, to be mixed with milk.

In July come gilliflowers of all varieties, early pears and plums in fruit, gennitings and codlings. Bacon's Essays.

Their entertainment at the height,
In cream and codlings rev'ling with delight.
King's Cookery.

He let it lie all winter in a gravel walk, south of a codling hedge. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A codling, ere it went his lip in,
Would straight become a golden pippin. Swift.

COE'FFICACY, kŏ-ĕf'fė-kā-sė. n. s. [con and efficacio, Lat.] The power of several things acting together to produce an effect.

We cannot in general infer the efficacy of those stars, or coefficacy particular in medications. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

COEFFI'CIENCY, kŏ-ĕf'fĭsh'ĕn-sė. n. s. [con and efficio, Lat.] Cooperation; the state of acting together to some single end.

The managing and carrying on of this work, by the spirits instrumental coefficiency, requires that they be kept together, without distinction or dissipation. Glanville's Scepsis.

COEFFI'CIENT, kŏ-ĕf-fĭsh'ĕnt. n. s. [con and efficiens, Lat.]

1. That which unites its action with the action of another.

2. [In algebra.] Such numbers, or given quantities, that are put before letters, or unknown quantities, into which letters they are supposed to be multiplied, and so do make a rectangle or product with the letters; as, $4a$, bx, cxx; where 4 is the coefficient of $4a$, b of bx, and c of cxx. Chambers.

3. In fluxions.

The coefficient of any generating term is the quantity arising by the division of that term, by the generated quantity. Chambers.

COE'LIACK Passion, sē'lē-ăk-pāsh'ŭn. [κοιλία, the belly.] A diarrhœa, or flux, that arises from the indigestion or putrefaction of food in the stomach and bowels, whereby the aliment comes away little altered from what it was when eaten, or changed like corrupted stinking flesh. Quincy.

COE'MPTION, kō-ĕm'shŭn. [412] n. s. [coemptio, Lat.] The act of buying up the whole quantity of any thing.

Monopolies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon's Essays.

COE'QUAL, kō-ē'quăl. adj. [from con and equalis, Lat.] Equal; being of the same rank or dignity with another.

Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy,
If once he came to be a cardinal,
He'll make his cap coequal with the crown.
Shaksp. Henry VI.

COEQUA'LITY, kō-ē-quŏl'ē-tē. n. s. [from coequal.] The state of being equal.

To COE'RCE, kō-ĕrse'. v. a. [coerceo, Lat.] To restrain; to keep in order by force.

Punishments are manifold, that they may coerce this profligate sort. Ayliffe's Parergon.

COE'RCIBLE, kō-ĕr'sē-bl. adj. [from coerce.]

1. That may be restrained.
2. That ought to be restrained.

COE'RCION, kō-ĕr'shŭn. n. s. [from coerce.] Penal restraint; check.

The coercion or execution of the sentence in ecclesiastical courts, is only by excommunication of the persons contumacious. Hale's Common Law.

Government has coercion and animadversion upon such as neglect their duty; without which coercive power, all government is toothless and precarious. South.

COE'RCIVE, kō-ĕr'sĭv. adj. [from coerce.]

1. That which has the power of laying restraint.

All things on the surface spread, are bound
By their coercive vigour to the ground! Blackmore.

2. That which has the authority of restraining by punishment.

For ministers to seek that themselves might have coercive power over the church, would have hardly been construed. Hooker, Preface.

The virtues of a general, or a king, are prudence, counsel, active fortitude, coercive power, awful command, and the exercise of magnanimity, as well as justice. Dryden.

COESSE'NTIAL, kō-ĕs-sĕn'shăl. adj. [con and essentia, Lat.] Participating of the same essence.

The Lord our God is but one God, in which indivisible unity we adore the Father, as being altogether of himself; we glorify that consubstantial Word, which is the Son; we bless and magnify that coessential Spirit eternally proceeding from both, which is the Holy Ghost. Hooker.

COESSENTIA'LITY, kō-ĕs-sĕn-shē-ăl'ē-tē. n. s. [from coessential.] Participation of the same essence.

COETA'NEOUS, kō-ē-tā'nē-ŭs. adj. [con and ætas, Lat.] Of the same age with another: with to.

Eve was old as Adam, and Cain their son coetaneous unto both. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Every fault hath penal effects, coetaneous to the act. Gov.

Through the body every member sustains another; and all are coetaneous, because none can subsist alone. Bentley's Sermons.

COE'TERNAL, kō-ē-tĕr'năl. adj. [con and æternus, Lat.] Equally eternal with another.

Or of the eternal coeternal beam!
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Arius had dishonoured his coeternally begotten Son. Hooker.

COETE'RNITY, kō-ē-tĕr'nē-tē. n. s. [from coeternal.] Having existence from eternity equal with another eternal being.

The eternity of the Son's generation, and his coeternity and consubstantiality with the Father, when he came down from heaven, and was incarnate. Hammond's Fundamentals.

COE'VAL, kō-ē'văl. adj. [cœvus, Lat.]

1. Of the same age.

Even his teeth and white, like a young flock, Coeval, and new-shorn, from the clear brook Recent. Prior.

2. Of the same age with another; followed by with.

This religion cannot pretend to be coeval with man. Hale.

The monthly revolutions of the moon; or the diurnal of the earth upon its own axis, by the very hypothesis, are coeval with the former. Bentley.

Silence, coeval with eternity!
Thou wert, ere nature first began to be:
'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slept fast in thee.
Pope.

3. Sometimes by to.

Although we had no monuments of religion ancienter than idolatry, we have no reason to conclude that idolatrous religion was coeval to mankind. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

COE'VAL, kō-ē'văl. n. s. [from the adjective.] A contemporary; but properly one not only living at the same time, but of the same time of life.

As it were not enough to have outdone all your coevals in wit, you will excel them in good-nature. Pope.

COE'VOUS, kō-ē'vŭs. adj. [cœvus, Lat.] One of the same age.

Then it should not have been the first, as supposing some other thing coevous to it. South.

To COEXI'ST, kō-ĕg-zĭst'. [478] v. n. [con and existo, Latin.]

1. To exist at the same time.

The three stars that coexist in heavenly constellations, are a multitude of stars. Hale.

Of substances no one has any clear idea, farther than of certain simple ideas coexisting together. Locke.

2. Followed by with.

It is sufficient that we have the idea of the length of any regular periodical appearances, which we can in our minds apply to duration, with which the motion or appearance never coexisted. Locke.

COEXI'STENCE, kō-ĕg-zĭs'tĕnse. n. s. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

Locke, who in the preceding lines has coexisted with, has here coexistence to.

The measuring of any duration, by some motion, depends not on the real coexistence of that thing to that motion, or any other periods of revolution. Locke.

2. More commonly followed by with.

We can demonstrate the being of God's eternal ideas, and their coexistence with him. Grew's Cos.

COEXI'STENT, kō-ĕg-zĭs'tĕnt. adj. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

To the measuring the duration of any thing by time, it is not requisite that that thing should be coexistent to the motion we measure by, or any other periodical revolution. Locke.

2. Sometimes with.

This proves no antecedent necessity, but coexistent with the act. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

Time is taken for so much of duration as is coexistent with the motions of the great bodies of the universe. Locke.

All that one point is either future or past, and no parts are coexistent or contemporary with it. Bentley.

To COEXTE'ND, kō-ĕks-tĕnd'. [477] v. a. [con and extendo, Lat.] To extend to the same space or duration with another.

Every motion is, in some sort, coextended with the body moved. Grew's Cosmologia.

COEXTE'NSION, kō-ĕk-stĕn'shŭn. n. s. [from coextend.] The act or state of extending to the same space or duration with another.

Though it be a spirit, I find it is no inconvenience to have some analogy, at least of coextension, with my body. Hale.

CO'FFEE, kŏf'fē. n. s. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced caheu, by the Turks, and cahuah by the Arabs.] The tree is a species of Arabick jessamine.

It is found to succeed as well in the Caribbee islands as in its native place of growth; but whether the coffee produced in the West Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will discover. Miller.

COFFEE denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for these eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Thevenot, a traveller, was the first who brought it into France; and a Greek servant called Pasqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turky merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, first set up the profession of coffeeman and introduced the drink among us. Chambers.

They have in Turky a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the same name, as black as soot, and of a strong scent, but not aromatical; which they take, beaten into powder, in water, as hot as they can drink it. This drink comforteth the brain and heart, and helpeth digestion. Bacon.

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon. Pope.

CO'FFEEHOUSE, kŏf'fē-hŏuse. n. s. [coffee and house.] A house of entertainment where coffee is sold, and the guests are supplied with news-papers.

At ten, from coffeehouse or play
Returning, finishes the day. Prior.

It is a point they do not concern themselves about, farther than perhaps as a subject in a coffeehouse. Swift.

CO'FFEEMAN, kŏf'fē-măn. [88] n. s. [coffee and man.] One that keeps a coffee-house.

Consider your enemies the Lacedemonians; did ever you hear that they preferred a coffeeman to Agesilaus? Addison.

CO'FFEEPOT, kŏf'fē-pŏt. n. s. [coffee and pot.] The covered pot in which coffee is boiled.

CO'FFER, kôf'fûr. n. s. [coppe, Saxon.]

1. A chest generally for keeping money.
   Two iron coffers hung on either side,
   With precious metal full as they could hold. Fairy Queen.
   The lining of his coffers shall make coats
   To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars. Shaksp.
   If you destroy your governour, that is wealthy, you must chuse another, who will fill his coffers out of what is left. L'Estrange.
2. Treasure.
   He would discharge it without any burthen to the queen's coffers, for honour sake. Bacon.
3. [In architecture.] A square depressure in each interval between the modillions of the Corinthian cornice, usually filled with some enrichment. Chambers.
4. [In fortification.] A hollow lodgment across a dry moat, from six to seven feet deep, and from sixteen to eighteen broad; the upper part being made of pieces of timber, raised two feet above the level of the moat; which little elevation has hurdles laden with earth for its covering, and serves as a parapet with embrasures. Chambers.

To Co'FFER, kôf'fûr. v. a. [from the noun.] To treasure up in chests.
Treasure, as a war might draw forth, so a peace succeeding might coffer up. Bacon's Henry VII.

Co'FFERER of the King's Household, kôf'fûr-ûr.[555] n. s. A principal officer of his majesty's court, next under the comptroller, that, in the compting-house and elsewhere, hath a special oversight of other officers of the household, for their good demeanour in their offices. Cowell.

CO'FFIN, kôf'fîn. n. s. [cofin, French.]

1. The box or chest in which dead bodies are put into the ground. It is used both of wood and other matter.
   He went as if he had been the coffin that carried himself to his sepulchre. Sidney.
   Not a flower sweet
   On my black coffin let there be strown. Shaksp.
   One fate they have,
   The ship their coffin, and the sea their grave. Wall.
   The joiner is fitting screws to your coffin. Swift.
2. A mould of paste for a pye.
   Of the paste a coffin will I rear,
   And make two pasties of your shameful heads. Shaksp.
3. A paper case, in form of a cone, used by grocers.
4. In farriery.
   Coffin of a horse, is the whole hoof of the foot above the coronet, including the coffin bone. The coffin bone is a small spongy bone, inclosed in the midst of the hoof, and possessing the whole form of the foot. Farrier's Dict.

To Co'FFIN, kôf'fîn. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a coffin.
   Would'st thou have laugh'd had I come coffin'd home,
   That weep'st to see me triumph? Shaksp. Corio.
   Let me lie
   In prison, and here be coffin'd, when I die. Donne.

Co'FFINMAKER, kôf'fîn-mâ-kûr.[98] n. s. [coffin and maker.] One whose trade is to make coffins.
   Where will be your sextons, coffinmakers, and plummers? Tatler.

To COG, kôg. v. a. [A word of uncertain original, derived by Skinner from coqueliner, French.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to sooth by adulatory speeches.
   I'll mountebank their loves,
   Cog their hearts from them, and come home belov'd
   Of all the trades in Rome. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
2. To cog a die. To secure it, so as to direct its fall; to falsify.
   But then my study was to cog the dice,
   And dext'rously to throw the lucky sice. Dryden.
   For guineas in other men's breeches,
   Your gamesters will palm and will cog. Swift.
   Ye gallants of Newgate, whose fingers are nice
   In diving in pockets, or cogging of dice. Swift.
3. To obtrude by falsehood.
   The outcry is, that I abuse his demonstration by a falsification, by cogging in the word. Tillotson.
   I have cogged in the word to serve my turn. Stilling fleet.
   Fustian tragedies, or insipid comedies, have, by concerted applauses, been cogged upon the town for masterpieces. Dennis.

Cogita'tion, kôdje-ê-tâ'shûn. n. s. [cogitatio, Lat.]

1. Thought; the act of thinking.
   Having their cogitations darkened, and being strangers from the life of God, from the ignorance which is in them. Hooker.
   A picture puts me in mind of a friend: the intention of the mind, in seeing, is carried to the object represented; which is no more than simple cogitation, or apprehension of the person. Stillingfleet.
   This Descartes proves that brutes have no cogitation because they could never be brought to signify their thoughts by any artificial signs. Ray.
   These powers of cogitation, and volition, and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it. Bentley.
2. Purpose; reflection previous to action.
   The king, perceiving that his desires were intemperate, and his cogitations vast and irregular, began not to brook him well. Bacon's Henry VII.
3. Meditation; contemplation; mental speculation.
   On some great charge employ'd
   He seem'd, or fixt in cogitation deep. Milton.

Co'GITATIVE, kôdje'ê-tâ-tîv. adj. [from cogito, Lat.]

1. Having the power of thought and reflection.
   If these powers of cogitation and sensation are neither inherent in matter, nor acquirable to matter, they proceed from some cogitative substance, which we call spirit and soul. Bentley.
2. Given to thought and deep meditation.
   The earl had the closer and more reserved countenance, being by nature more cogitative. Wotton.

Cogna'tion, kôg-nâ'shûn. n. s. [cognatio, Lat.]

1. Kindred; descent from the same original.
   Two vices I shall mention, as being of near cognation to ingratitude; pride, and hard-heartedness, or want of compassion. South.
   Let the criticks tell me what certain sense they could put upon either of these four words, by their mere cognation with each other. Watts on the Mind.
2. Relation; participation of the same nature.
   He induceth us to ascribe effects unto causes of no cognation. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Cognisee', kôg-nê-zêê', or kôn-ê-zêê'. n. s. [In law.] He to whom a fine in lands or tenements is acknowledged. Cowell.

Co'gnisour, kôg-nê-zôr', or kôn-ê-zôr'.[314] n. s. [In law.] Is he that passeth or acknowledgeth a fine in lands or tenements to another. Cowell.

COGNI'TION, kôg-nîsh'ûn. n. s. [cognitio, Lat.] Knowledge; complete conviction.
   I will not be myself, nor have cognition
   Of what I feel: I am all patience. Shaksp.
   God, as he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all; not only in power, as under his subjection; or in his presence, as in his cognition; but in their very essence, as in the soul of their casualities. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Co'gnitive, kôg'nê-tîv. adj. [from cognitus, Lat.] Having the power of knowing.
   Unless the understanding employ and exercise its cognitive or apprehensive power about these terms, there can be no actual apprehension of them. South's Sermons.

Co'gnizable, kôg'nê-zâ-bl, or kôn'ê-zâ-bl.[405] adj. [cognoisable, Fr.]

1. That falls under judicial notice.
2. Liable to be tried, judged, or examined.
   Some are merely of ecclesiastical cognizance; others of a mixed nature, such as are cognizable both in the ecclesiastical and secular courts. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Co'gnizance, kôg'nê-zânse, or kôn'ê-zâns. n. s. [connoisance, Fr.]

1. Judicial notice; trial; judicial authority.
   It is worth the while, however, to consider how we may discountenance and prevent those evils which the law can take no cognizance of. L'Estrange.

Happiness or misery, in converse with others, depends upon things which human laws can take no cognizance of. South.

The moral crime is completed, there are only circumstances wanting to work it up for the cognizance of the law. Addison.

2. A badge, by which any one is known.

And at the king's going away the earl's servants stood, in a seemly manner, in their livery coats, with cognizances, ranged on both sides, and made the king a bow. Bacon's Henry VII.

These were the proper cognizances and coat-arms of the tribes. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

COGNO'MINAL, kŏg-nŏm'ė-nâl. adj. [cognomen, Lat.] Having the same name.

Nor do these animals more resemble the creatures on earth, than they on earth the constellations which pass under animal names in heaven; nor the dog-fish at sea much more make out the dog of the land, than his cognominal or namesake in the heavens. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

COGNOMINA'TION, kŏg-nŏm-ė-nâ'shŭn. n. s. [cognomen, Lat.]

1. A surname; the name of a family.

2. A name added from any accident or quality.

Pompey deserved the name Great: Alexander, of the same cognomination, was generalissimo of Greece. Brown.

COGNO'SCENCE, kŏg-nŏs'sėnse. n. s. [cognosco, Lat.] Knowledge; the state or act of knowing. Dict.

COGNO'SCIBLE, kŏg-nŏs'sė-bl. adj. [cognosco, Lat.] That may be known; being the object of knowledge.

The same that is said for the redundance of matters intelligible and cognoscible in things natural, may be applied to things artificial. Hale.

To COHA'BIT, kŏ-hâb'ĭt. v. n. [cohabito, Lat.]

1. To dwell with another in the same place.

The Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army: they were not able to cohabit with that holy thing. South.

2. To live together as husband and wife

He knew her not to be his own wife, and yet had a design to cohabit with her as such. Fiddes.

COHA'BITANT, kŏ-hâb'ė-tânt. n. s. [from cohabit.] An inhabitant of the same place.

The oppressed Indians protest against that heaven where the Spaniards are to be their cohabitants. Decay of Piety.

COHABITA'TION, kŏ-hâb-ė-tâ'shŭn. n. s. [from cohabit.]

1. The act or state of inhabiting the same place with another.

2. The state of living together as married persons.

Which defect, though it could not evacuate a marriage after cohabitation and actual consummation yet it was enough to make void a contract. Bacon.

Monsieur Brumars, at one hundred and two years, died for love of his wife, who was ninety two at her death, after seventy years cohabitation. Tatler.

COHE'IR, kŏ-âre'. n. s. [cohæres, Lat.] One of several among whom an inheritance is divided.

Married persons, and widows, and virgins, are all coheirs in the inheritance of Jesus, if they live within the laws of their estate. Taylor.

COHE'IRESS, kŏ-â'rĭs.[99] n. s. [from coheir.] A woman who has an equal share of an inheritance with other women.

To COHE'RE, kŏ-hêre'. v. n. [cohæreo, Lat.]

1. To stick together; to hold fast one to another, as parts of the same mass.

Two pieces of marble, having their surface exactly plain, polite, and applied to each other in such a manner as to intercept the air, do cohere firmly together as one. Woodward.

We find that the force, whereby bodies cohere, is very much greater when they come to immediate contact, than when they are at ever so small a finite distance. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

None want a place; for all, their centre found,
Hung to the goddess, and coher'd around;
Not closer, orb in orb conglob'd, are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen. Pope.

2. To be well connected; to follow regularly in the order of discourse.

3. To suit; to fit; to be fitted to.

Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing. Shaksp.

4. To agree.

COHE'RENCE, kŏ-hê'rênse. } n. s. [co-
COHE'RENCY, kŏ-hê'rên-sė. } hærentia, Lat.]

1. That state of bodies in which their parts are joined together, from what cause soever it proceeds; so that they resist divulsion and separation; nor can be separated by the same force by which they might be simply moved, or, being only laid upon one another, might be parted again. Quincy.

The pressure of the air will not explain, nor can be a cause of, the coherence of the particles of air themselves. Locke.

Matter is either fluid or solid; words that may comprehend the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion. Bentley.

2. Connection; dependency; the relation of parts or things one to another.

It shall be no trouble to find each controversy's resting-place, and the coherence it hath with things, either on which it dependeth, or which depend on it. Hooker, Preface.

Why between sermons and faith should there be ordinarily that coherence, which causes have with their usual effects? Hooker.

3. The texture of a discourse, by which one part follows another regularly and naturally.

4. Consistency in reasoning, or relating, so that one part of the discourse does not destroy or contradict the rest.

Coherence of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, are most eminently to be found in him. Locke.

COHE'RENT, kŏ-hê'rênt. adj. [cohærens, Lat.]

1. Sticking together; so as to resist separation.

By coagulating and diluting, that is, making their parts more or less coherent. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Where all must full, or not coherent be;
And all that rises, rise in due degree. Pope.

2. Connected; united.

The mind proceeds from the knowledge it stands possessed of already, to that which lies next, and is coherent to it, and so on to what it aims at. Locke.

3. Suitable to something else; regularly adapted.

Instruct my daughter,
That time and place, with this deceit so lawful,
May prove coherent. Shakspeare.

4. Consistent; not contradictory to itself.

A coherent thinker, and a strict reasoner, is not to be made at once by a set of rules. Watts's Logick.

COHE'SION, kŏ-hê'zhŭn. n. s. [from cohere.]

1. The act of sticking together.

Hard particles heaped together touch in a few points, and must be separable by less force than breaks a solid particle, whose parts touch in all the space between them, without any pores or interstices to weaken their cohesion. Newton's Opticks.

Solids and fluids differ in the degree of cohesion, which, being increased, turns a fluid into a solid. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The state of union or inseparability.

What cause of their cohesion can you find?
What props support, what chains the fabrick bind? Blackmore.

3. Connection; dependence.

In their tender years, ideas that have no natural cohesion come to be united in their heads. Locke.

COHE'SIVE, kŏ-hê'sĭv.[168 428] adj. [from cohere.] That has the power of sticking to another, and of resisting separation.

COHE'SIVENESS, kŏ-hê'sĭv-nĕs. n. s. [from cohesive.] The quality of being cohesive; the quality of resisting separation.

To COHI'BIT, kŏ-hĭb'ĭt. v. a. [cohibeo, Lat.] To restrain; to hinder. Dict.

To CO'HOBATE, kŏ'hŏ-bâte.[91] v. a. To pour the distilled liquor upon the remaining matter, and distil it again.

The juices of an animal body are, as it were, cohobated, being excreted, and admitted again into the blood with the fresh aliment. Arbuthnot.

COHOBA'TION, kŏ-hŏ-bâ'shŭn. n. s. [from cohobate.] A returning any distilled liquor again upon what it is drawn from, or upon fresh ingredients of the same kind, to have it the more impregnated with their virtues. Quincy.

Cohobation is the pouring the liquor distilled from any thing back upon the remaining matter, and distilling it again. Locke.

This oil, dulcified by cohobation with an aromatized spirit, is of use to restore the digestive faculty. Grew's Musæum.

CO'HORT, kŏ'hôrt. n. s. [cohors, Latin.]

1. A troop of soldiers in the Roman armies, containing about five hundred foot.

The Romans levied as many cohorts, companies, and ensigns, from hence, as from any of their provinces. Camden.

2. [In poetical language.] A body of warriours.

Th' arch-angelic pow'r prepar'd
For swift descent; with him the cohort bright
Of watchful cherubim. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Here Churchill, not so prompt
To vaunt as fight, his hardy cohorts join'd
With Eugene. Philip's Blenheim.

COHORTA'TION, kŏ-hôr-tâ'shŭn. n. s. [cohortatio, Lat.] Encouragement by words; incitement. Dict.

The judges of the four circuits in Wales, although they are not of the first magnitude, nor need be of the degree of the coif, yet are they considerable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

No less a man than a brother of the coif began his suit, before he had been a twelvemonth at the Temple. Addison, Spectator.

Instead of home-spun coifs were seen
Good pinners edg'd with colbertine. Swift.

CO'IFED, kŏĭft.[359] adj. [from coif.] Wearing a coif.

CO'IFFURE, kŏĭf'fûre. n. s. [coeffure, Fr.] Head-dress.

I am pleased with the coiffure now in fashion, and think it shews the good sense of the valuable part of the sex. Addison.

COIGNE, kŏin. n. s. [An Irish term, as it seems.]

Fitz Thomas of Desmond began that extortion of coigne and livery, and pay; that is, he and his army took horse meat and man's meat, and money, at pleasure. Davies on Ireland.

COIGNE, quŏin. n. s. [French.]

1. A corner.

No jutting frieze,
Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendent bed. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

2. A wooden wedge used by printers.

To COIL, kŏil. v. a. [cueillir, Fr.] To gather into a narrow compass; as, to coil a rope, to wind it in a ring.

The lurking particles of air, so expanding themselves, must necessarily plump out the sides of the bladder, and so keep them turgid, until the pressure of the air, that at first coiled them, be re-admitted to do the same thing again. Boyle.

COIL, kŏil. n. s. [kolleren, Germ.]

1. Tumult; turmoil; bustle; stir; hurry; confusion.

Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason. Shakspeare's Tempest.
You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you. Shaksp.
In that sleep of death, what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

2. A rope wound into a ring.

COIN, kŏin. n. s. [coigne, French.] A corner; any thing standing out angularly; a square brick cut diagonally: called often quoin, or quine.

See you yond' coin o' th' capitol, yond' corner stone? Shakspeare.

COIN, kŏin. n. s. [by some imagined to come from cuneus, a wedge, because metal is cut in wedges to be coined.]

1. Money stamped with a legal impression.

He gave Dametas a good sum of gold in ready coin, which Menalcas had bequeathed. Sidney.
You have made
Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin. Shaks.
I cannot tell how the poets will succeed in the explication of coins, to which they are generally very great strangers. Addison.
She now contracts her vast design,
And all her triumphs shrink into a coin. Pope.

2. Payment of any kind.

The loss of present advantage to flesh and blood, is repaid in a nobler coin. Hammond's Fundamentals.

To COIN, kŏin. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mint or stamp metals for money.

They cannot touch me for coining: I am the king. Shakspeare.
They never put in practice a thing so necessary as coined money is. Peacham of Antiquities.
Tenants cannot coin rent just at quarter-day, but must gather it by degrees. Locke.
Can we be sure that this medal was really coined by an artificer, or is but a product of the soil from whence it was taken? Bentley.

3. To make or invent.

My lungs
Coin words till their decay, against those measles
Which we disdain should tetter us. Shakspeare.

3. To make or forge any thing, in an ill sense.

Never coin a formal lye on't,
To make the knight o'ercome the giant. Hudibras.
Those motives induced Virgil to coin his fable. Dryden.
Some tale, some new pretence, he daily, coin'd,
To sooth his sister, and delude her mind. Dryden.
A term is coined to make the conveyance easy. Atterbury.

CO'INAGE, kŏin'âje.[91] n. s. [from coin.]

1. The art or practice of coining money.

The care of the coinage was committed to the inferior magistrates; and I don't find that they had a publick trial, as we solemnly practise in this country. Arbuthnot.

2. Coin; money; stamped and legitimated metal.

This is conceived to be a coinage of some Jews, in derision of Christians, who first began that portrait. Brown.
Moor was forced to leave off coining, by the great crowds of people continually offering to return his coinage upon him. Swift.

3. The charges of coining money.

4. New production; invention.

Unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival of words, runs into affectation; a fault to be avoided on either hand. Dryden.

5. Forgery; invention.

This is the very coinage of your brain;
This bodiless creation ecstacy
Is very cunning in. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

To COINCI'DE, kŏ-în-side'. v. n. [coincido, Lat.]

1. To fall upon the same point; to meet in the same point.

If the equator and ecliptick had coincided, it would have rendered the annual revolution of the earth useless. Cheyne.

2. To concur; to be consistent with.

The rules of right judgment, and of good ratiocination, often coincide with each other. Watts.

CO'INCIDENCE, kŏ-în'sė-dense. n. s. [from coincide.]

1. The state of several bodies, or lines, falling upon the same point.

An universal equilibrium, arising from the coincidence of infinite centres, can never be naturally acquired. Bentley.

2. Concurrence; consistency; tendency of many things to the same end; occurrence of many things at the same time.

The very concurrence and coincidence of so many evidences that contribute to the proof, carries a great weight. Hale.

3. It is followed by with.

The coincidence of the planes of this rotation with one another, and with the plane of the ecliptick, is very near the truth. Cheyne's Philosophical Princip.

CO'INCIDENT, kŏ-în'sė-dent. adj. [from coincide.]

1. Falling upon the same point.

These circles I viewed through a prism; and, as I went from them, they came nearer and nearer together, and at length became coincident. Newton.

2. Concurrent; consistent; equivalent: followed by with.

Christianity teaches nothing but what is perfectly suitable to and coincident with the ruling principles of a virtuous and well-inclined man. South.
These words of our apostle are exactly coincident with that controverted passage in his discourse to the Athenians. Bentley.

COINDICA'TION, kŏ-în-dė-kâ'shŭn. n. s. [from con and indico, Lat.] Many symptoms betokening the same cause.

CO'INER, kŏin'ŭr.[98] n. s. [from coin.]

1. A maker of money; a minter; a stamper of coin.

My father was I know not where
When I was stampt: some coiner with his tools
Made me a counterfeit. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
It is easy to find designs that never entered into the thoughts of the sculptor or the coiner. Addison.

COLD, kŏld. adj. [cold, Saxon; kalt, German.]

1. Not hot; not warm; gelid; wanting warmth; being without heat.

The diet in the state of manhood ought to be solid; and their chief drink water cold, because in such a state it has its own natural spirit. Arbuthnot.

The aggregated soil
Death, with his mace petrifick, cold, and dry,
As with a trident, smote. Milton.

2. Causing sense of cold.

Bids us seek
Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish
Our limbs benumb'd, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams
Reflected, may with matter sere foment. Milton.

3. Chill; shivering; having sense of cold.

O noble English, that could entertain,
With half their force, the full power of France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action. Shakspeare.

4. Having cold qualities; not volatile; not acrid.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun than the hot herbs; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon.

5. Indifferent; frigid; wanting passion; wanting zeal; without concern; unactive; unconcerned; wanting ardour.

There sprung up one kind of men, with whose zeal and forwardness the rest being compared, were thought to be marvellous cold and dull. Hooker.

Infinite shall be made cold in religion, by your example, that never were hurt by reading books. Ascham.

Temp'rately proceed to what you would
Thus violently redress.——Sir, these cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous. Shakspeare.

New dated letters these,
Their cold intent, tenour, and substance thus;
Here doth he wish his person, and his power,
The which he could not levy. Shakspeare.

We should not, when the blood was cold, have threatened our prisoners with the sword. Shakspeare.

To see a world in flames, and an host of angels in the clouds, one must be much of a stoick to be a cold and unconcerned spectator. Burnet's Theory.

No drum or trumpet needs
T' inspire the coward, or to warm the cold;
His voice, his sole appearance, makes them bold. Dryden.

O, thou hast touch'd me with thy sacred theme,
And my cold heart is kindled at thy flame. Rowe.

A man must be of a very cold or degenerate temper, whose heart doth not burn within him in the midst of praise and adoration. Addison's Freeholder.

6. Unaffecting; unable to move the passions.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, following feasts and plays. Ben Jonson.

The rabble are pleased at the first entry of a disguise; but the jest grows cold even with them too, when it comes on in a second scene. Addison.

As is a dead man's nose. Shakspeare.

Cold, kōld. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The cause of the sensation of cold; the privation of heat; the frigorifick power.

Fair lined slippers for the cold. Shakspeare.

Heat and cold are nature's two hands, whereby she chiefly worketh: and heat we have in readiness, in respect of the fire; but for cold, we must stay till it cometh, or seek it in deep caves, or high mountains: and, when all is done, we cannot obtain it in any great degree. Bacon's Natural History.

The sun
Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat
Scarce tolerable, and from the north to call
Decrepit winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat. Milton.

2. The sensation of cold; coldness; chilness.

When she saw her lord prepar'd to part,
A deadly cold ran shiv'ring to her heart. Dryden.

3. A disease caused by cold; the obstruction of perspiration.

What disease hast thou?——
A whoreson cold, Sir; a cough. Shakspeare.

Let no ungentle cold destroy
All taste we have of heavenly joy. Roscommon.

Those rains, so covering the earth, might providentially contribute to the disruption of it, by stopping all the pores and all evaporation, which would make the vapours within struggle violently, as we get a fever by a cold. Burnet.

Co'ldly, kōld'lé. adv. [from cold.]

1. Without heat.

2. Without concern; indifferently; negligently; without warmth of temper or expression.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
We coldly pause for thee. Shakspeare's King John.

Swift seem'd to wonder what he meant,
Nor would believe my lord had sent;
So never offer'd once to stir,
But coldly said, Your servant, Sir. Swift.

Co'ldness, kōld'nés. n. s. [from cold.]

1. Want of heat; power of causing the sensation of cold.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle's Experiments.

Such was the discord, which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Denham.

2. Unconcern; frigidity of temper; want of zeal; negligence; disregard.

Divisions of religion are not only the farthest spread, because in religion all men presume themselves interested; but they are also, for the most part, hotlier persecuted: forasmuch as coldness, which, in other contentions, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not in these so favourably construed. Hooker's Dedication.

If, upon reading admired passages in authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them. Addison.

It betrayed itself in a sort of indifference and carelessness in all her actions, and coldness to her best friends. Arbuthnot.

3. Coyness; want of kindness; want of passion.

Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise
Tempests and storms in his afflicted bosom! Addison's Cato.

Let ev'ry tongue its various censures chuse,
Absolve with coldness, or with spite accuse. Prior.

4. Chastity; exemption from vehement desire.

The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps. Pope's Windsor Forest.

Co'leseed, kōle'sēēd.[246] n. s. [from cole and seed.] Cabbage seed.

Where land is rank, it is not good to sow wheat after a fallow; but coleseed or barley, and then wheat. Mortimer.

Co'lewort, kōle'wûrt.[165] n. s. [caplpÿrc, Sax.] A species of cabbage.

The decoction of coleworts is also commended to bathe them. Wiseman of an Erysipelas.

She took the coleworts which her husband got
From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot);
She strip'd the stalks of all their leaves; the best
She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd. Dryden.

How turnips hide their swelling heads below,
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow. Gay.

Co'lick, kōl'lik. n. s. [colicus, Lat.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choler irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatuses and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places streightened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk catharticks, joined with opiates and emollient diluters. There is also a species of this distemper, which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephritick and oily diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters. Quincy.

Colicks of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments. Arbuthnot.

Co'lick, kōl'lik. adj. Affecting the bowels.

Intestine stone and ulcer, colick pangs. Milton.

Must I be comforted, not in his sphere. Shaksp.

Thus saying, from his radiant seat he rose
Of high collateral glory. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. Running parallel.

3. Diffused on either side.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection; and beget
Like of his like, his image multiply'd
In unity defective, which requires
Collateral love and dearest amity. Milt. Par. Lost.

4. In genealogy, those that stand in equal relation to some common ancestor.

The estate and inheritance of a person dying intestate, is, by right of devolution, according to the civil law, given to such as are allied to him ex latere, commonly styled collaterals, if there be no ascendants or descendants surviving at the time of his death. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Not direct; not immediate.

They shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me;
If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give
To you in satisfaction. Shaksp.

6. Concurrent.

All the force of the motive lies within itself: it receives no collateral strength from external considerations. Atterbury.

COLLA'TERALLY, kŏl-lăt'tĕr-ăl-lē. adv. [from collateral.]

1. Side by side.

These pullies may be multiplied according to sundry different situations, not only when they are subordinate, but also when they are placed collaterally. Wilkins.

2. Indirectly.

By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have created two enemies: the papists more directly, because they have kept the scripture from us; and the fanatics more collaterally, because they have assumed what amounts to an infallibility in the private spirit. Dryden.

3. In collateral relation.

COLLA'TION, kŏl-lā'shŭn. n. s. [collatio, Latin.]

CO'LON, kō'lŏn. n. s. [κωλον, a member.]

1. A point [:] used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed; nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the semicolon. It was used, before punctuation was refined, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction; as, I love him, I despise him: I have long ceased to trust, but shall never forbear to succour him.

2. The greatest and widest of all the intestines, about eight or nine hands breadth long. It begins where the ilium ends, in the cavity of the os ilium on the right side; from thence ascending by the kidney on the same side, it passes under the concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum in the rectum. Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I strain my guts, my colon wound. Swift.

The contents of the colon are of a sour, fetid, acid smell in rabbits. Floyer on the Humours.

CO'LONEL, kŭr'nĕl. n. s. [of uncertain etymology Skinner imagines it originally colonialis, the leader of a colony. Minshew deduces it from colonna, a pillar: as, patriæ columen; exercitus columen. Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally sounded with only two distinct syllables, col'nel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison. Spenser on Ireland.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,
If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms. Milton.

CO'LONELSHIP, kŭr'nĕl-shĭp. n. s. [from colonel.] The office or character of a colonel.

While he continued a subaltern, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that colonelship was coming fast upon him. Swift.

To CO'LONIZE, kŏl'ō-nīze. v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with cŏlonies.

There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the Christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory; so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention. Bacon's Holy War.

Druina hath advantage by acquest of islands, which she colonizeth and fortifieth daily. Howel's Vocal Forest.

COLONNA'DE, kŏl-lō-nāde'. n. s. [from colonna, Ital. a column.]

The rising city, which from far you see,
Is Carthage, and a Tyrian colony. Dryden.

Co'LOPHONY, kŏl'ŏ-fŏn-ė. n. s. [from Colophon, a city, whence it came.] Rosin.
Of Venetian turpentine, slowly evaporating about a fourth or fifth part, the remaining substance suffered to cool, would afford me a coherent body, or a fine colophony. Boyle.
Turpentines and oils leave a colophony, upon a separation of their thinner oil. Floyer.

Coloqui'nteda, kŏl-lŏ-kwĭn'tė-dă. n. s. [colocynthis, Lat. κολοκυνθις.] The fruit of a plant of the same name, brought from the Levant, about the bigness of a large orange, and often called bitter apple. Both the seed and the pulp are intolerably bitter. It is a violent purgative, of considerable use in medicine. Chambers.

Co'lorate, kŏl'ŏ-råte.[91] adj. [coloratus, Lat.] Coloured; dyed; marked or stained with some colour.
Had the tunicles and humours of the eye been colorate, many rays from visible objects would have been stopt. Ray.

Colora'tion, kŏl-ŏ-rå'shŭn. n. s. [coloro, Lat.]
1. The art or practice of colouring.
Some bodies have a more departable nature than others, as is evident in coloration; for a small quantity of saffron will tinct more than a great quantity of brasil. Bacon.
2. The state of being coloured.
Amongst curiosities I shall place coloration, though somewhat better; for beauty in flowers is their preheminence. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Colori'fick, kŏl-lŏ-rĭf'ĭk, adj. [colorificus, Lat.] That which has the power of producing dyes, tints, colours, or hues.
In this composition of white, the several rays do not suffer any change in their colorifick qualities by acting upon one another; but are only mixed, and by a mixture of their colours produce white. Newton's Opticks.

COLO'SSE, kŏ-lŏs'. } n. s. [colossus Lat.] A statue of enormous magnitude.
COLO'SSUS, kŏ-lŏs'sŭs. }

CO'LOUR, kŭl'lŭr.[168 314] n. s. [color, Lat.]
1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; dye.
It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various colours to be different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which surfaces are composed. Watts.
Her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Shaksp.
For though our eyes can nought but colours see,
Yet colours give them not their power of sight. Davies.
The lights of colours are more refrangible one than another in this order; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet. Newton's Opticks.
2. The freshness, or appearance of blood in the face.
My cheeks no longer did their colour boast. Dryd.
A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
And his ears trickled, and his colour fled. Dryden.
3. The tint of the painter.
When each bold figure just begins to live,
The treach'rous colours the fair art betray,
And all the bright creation fades away. Pope.
4. The representation of any thing superficially examined.
Their wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.
5. Concealment; palliation; excuse; superficial cover.
It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Their sin admitted no colour or excuse. King Charles.
6. Appearance; pretence; false shew.
Under the color of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer. Shaksp.

Co'lourable, kŭl'lŭr-å-bl. adj. [from colour.] Specious; plausible. It is now little used.
They have now a colourable pretence to withstand innovations, having accepted of other laws and rules already. Spenser.
They were glad to lay hold on so colourable a matter, and to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovation. Hooker.
Had I sacrificed ecclesiastical government and revenues to their covetousness and ambition, they would have found no colourable necessity of an army. King Charles.
We hope the mercy of God will consider us unto some mineration of our offences; yet had not the sincerity of our parents so colourable expectations. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Co'lourably, kŭl'lŭr-å-blė. adv. [from colourable.] Speciously; plausibly.
The process, howsoever colourably awarded, hath not hit the very mark whereat it was directed. Bacon.

Co'loured, kŭl'lŭrd.[359] participial adj. [from colour.] Streaked; diversified with variety of hues.
The coloured are coarser juiced, and therefore not so well and equally concocted. Bacon.

Co'louring, kŭl'lŭr-ĭng. n. s. [from colour.] The part of the painter's art that teaches to lay on his colours with propriety and beauty.
But as the slightest sketch, if justly trac'd,
Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac'd;
So by false learning is good sense defac'd. Pope.

Co'lourist, kŭl'lŭr-ĭst. n. s. [from colour.] A painter who excels in giving the proper colours to his designs.
Titian, Paul Veronese, Van Dyck, and the rest of the good colourists, have come nearest to nature. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Co'lourless, kŭl'lŭr-lĕs. adj. [from colour.] Without colour; not distinguished by any hue; transparent.
Transparent substances, as glass, water, and air, when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherways formed into plates, exhibit various colours, according to their various thinness; although, at a greater thickness they appear very clear and colourless. Newton's Opticks.
Pellucid colourless glass or water, by being beaten into a powder or froth, do acquire a very intense whiteness. Bentley.

COLT, kŏlt. n. s. [colt, Sax.]

59. To come. In futurity; not present; to happen hereafter.

It serveth to discover that which is hid, as well as to foretel that which is to come. Bacon.

In times to come,
My waves shall wash the walls of mighty Rome. Dryden.

Taking a lease of land for years to come, at the rent of one hundred pounds. Locke.

60. Come is a word of which the use is various and extensive, but the radical signification of tendency hitherward is uniformly preserved. When we say he came from a place, the idea is that of returning, or arriving, or becoming nearer; when we say he went from a place, we conceive simply departure, or removal to a greater distance. The butter comes; it is passing from its former state to that which is desired; it is advancing towards us.

COME. [participle of the verb.]

Thy words were heard, and I am come to thy words. Daniel.

COME. A particle of exhortation; be quick; make no delay.

Come, let us make our father drink wine. Gen. xix. 32.

COME. A particle of reconciliation, or incitement to it.

Come, come, at all I laugh he laughs no doubt;
The only difference is, I dare laugh out. Pope.

COME. A kind of adverbial word for when it shall come; as, come Wednesday, when Wednesday shall come.

Come Candlemas, nine years ago she died. Gay.

COME, kům. n. s. [from the verb.] A sprout; a cant term.

That the malt is sufficiently well dried, you may know both by the taste, and also by the falling off of the come or sprout. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COME'DIAN, kŏ-mē'dē-ân.[293 376] n. s. [from comedy.]

1. A player or actor of comic parts.

2. A player in general: a stage-player; an actress or actor.

Melissarion, pretty honey-bee, when of a comedian she became a wealthy man's wife, would be saluted Madam Pithias, or Prudence. Camden.

3. A writer of comedies.

Scaliger willeth us to admire Plautus as a comedian, but Terence as a pure and elegant speaker. Peacham of Poetry.

CO'MEDY, kŏm'mē-dē. n. s. [comedia, Lat.] A dramatick representation of the lighter faults of mankind, with an intention to make vice and folly ridiculous; opposed to tragedy.

Your honour's players
Are come to play a pleasant comedy. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.

A long, exact, and serious comedy;
In every scene some moral let it teach,
And, if it can, at once both please and preach. Pope.

CO'MELINESS, kům'lē-nĕs. n. s. [from comely.] Grace; beauty; dignity. It signifies something less forcible than beauty, less elegant than grace, and less light than prettiness.

A careless comeliness with comely care. Sidney.

The service of God hath not such perfection of grace and comeliness, as when the dignity of the place doth concur. Hooker.

They skilled not of the goodly ornaments of poetry, yet were sprinkled with some pretty flowers, which gave good grace and comeliness. Spenser on Ireland.

Hardly shall you meet with man or woman so aged or ill-favoured, but, if you will commend them for comeliness, nay and for youth too, shall take it well. South.

There is great pulchritude and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers, and fruits of plants. Ray on the Creation.

A horseman's coat shall hide
Thy taper shape, and comeliness of side. Prior.

CO'MELY, kům'lē.[165] adj. [from become; or from cpeman, Sax. to please.]

1. Graceful; decent; having dignity or grandeur of mien or look. Comeliness seems to be that species of beauty which excites respect rather than pleasure.

If the principal part of beauty is in decent motion, no marvel though persons in years seem many times more amiable; for no youth can be comely but by pardon, and considering the youth as to make up the comeliness. Bacon.

He that is comely, when old and decrepit, surely was very beautiful when he was young. South.

Thou art a comely, young, and valiant knight. Dryden.

2. Used of things; decent; according to propriety.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it. Shak. As you like it.

This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying confusion. Shak. Coriolanus.

Co'MELY, kŭm'lé.[165] adv. [from the adjective.] Handsomely; gracefully.

To ride comely, to play at all weapons, to dance comely, be very necessary for a courtly gentleman. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Co'MER, kŭm'mŭr.[98] n. s. [from come.] One that comes.

Time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;
But with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles,
And farewel goes out sighing.
Shaksp. Troil. and Cress.

Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair,
As any comer I have look'd on yet,
For my affection. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

Plants move upwards; but, if the sap puts up too fast, it maketh a slender stalk, which will not support the weight; and therefore these are all swift and hasty comers. Bacon.

It is natural to be kind to the last comer. L'Estr.

Now leave those joys, unsuiting to thy age,
To a fresh comer, and resign the stage. Dryden.

The renowned champion of our lady of Loretto, and the miraculous translation of her chapel; about which he hath published a defiance to the world, and offers to prove it against all comers. Stillingfleet.

There it is not strange, that the mind should give itself up to the common opinion, or render itself to the first comer. Locke.

House and heart are open for a friend; the passage is easy, and not only admits, but even invites, the comer. South.

CO'MET, kŏm'ĭt.[99] n. s. [cometa, Lat. a hairy star.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region, appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit, like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the centre of the sun; and being very long and eccentrick, they become invisible when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun: hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phænomena of the several. Thus, when the comet is eastward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, barbatus, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by the neighbourhood to the sun; and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused, may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increase wholly from fluids, and turn, by putrefaction, into earth. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply. And I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtilest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at Midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was two thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years.
Trevoux. Chambers.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wond'rous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy?
Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.

Such his fell glances as the fatal light
Of staring comets. Crashaw.

I considered a comet, or in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison's Guardian.

Fierce meteors shoot their arbitrary light,
And comets march with lawless horrors bright.
Prior.

Co'METARY, kŏm'mé-tăr-é.[512] } adj. [from
COME'TICK, kŏ-mĕt'ĭk.[509] } comet.] Relating to a comet.

CO'MFIT, kŭm'fĭt.[165] n. s. [bellaria, arida, Lat. konfit, Dut. It should seem that both are formed by hasty pronunciation from confect.] A dry sweetmeat; any kind of fruit or root preserved with sugar, and dried.

By feeding me on beans and pease,
He crams in nasty crevices,
And turns to comfits by his arts,
To make me relish for desserts. Hudibras.

To Co'MFIT, kŭm'fĭt.[165] v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve dry with sugar.

The fruit that does so quickly waste,
Men scarce can see it, much less taste,
Thou comfitest in streets to make it last. Cowley.

Co'MFITURE, kŭm'fé-tshŭre.[461] n. s. [from comfit, or confecture.] Sweetmeat.

From country grass to comfitures of court,
Or city's quelque-choses, let not report
My mind transport. Donne.

To CO'MFORT, kŭm'fŭrt.[165] v. a. [comforto, low Lat. Salvia comfortat nervos. Schol. Sal.]

1. To strengthen; to enliven; to invigorate.

The evidence of God's own testimony, added unto the natural assent of reason, concerning the certainty of them, doth not a little comfort and confirm the same. Hooker.

Light excelleth in comforting the spirits of men; light varied doth the same effect, with more novelty. This is the cause why precious stones comfort.
Bacon's Natural History.

Some of the abbots had been guilty of comforting and assisting the rebels. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. To console; to strengthen the mind under the pressure of calamity.

They bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the Lord had brought upon him.
Job, xlii. 11.

Co'MFORT, kŭm'fŭrt.[98] n. s [from the verb.]

1. Support; assistance; countenance.

Foyanings made a wild chace upon the wild Irish; where, in respect of the mountains and fastnesses, he did little good, which he would needs impute unto the comfort that the rebels should receive underhand from the earl of Kildare. Bacon.

The king did also appoint commissioners for the fining of all such as were of any value, and had any hand or partaking in the aid or comfort of Perkins, or the Cornishmen. Bacon.

2. Consolation; support under calamity or danger.

Her soul heaven's queen, whose name she bears,
In comfort of her mother's fears,
Hath plac'd among her virgin train. Ben Jonson.

As they have no apprehensions of those things, so they need no comfort against them. Tillotson.

3. That which gives consolation or support in calamity.

I will keep her ign'rant of her good,
To make her heav'nly comforts of despair,
When it is least expected. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.

Your children were vexation to your youth,
But mine shall be a comfort to your age.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

We need not fear
To pass commodiously this life, sustain'd
By him with many comforts, till we end
In dust, our final rest and native home. Milton.
